

The White Man's Burden by Rudyard Kipling

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Modern age is characterized by a great number of free states which have their own government and are independent. However, things were different even one hundred years ago. The world was divided between a small number of states which ruled in the rest of countries which were called colonies. These states were great empires, which managed to colonize new lands at the Age of Discovery.

Britain was one of them. Being a small island, it ruled over the biggest part of the world. However, this government was not always fair. Very often representatives of colonies were treated like people of second quality. They did not have equal rights and were usually taken as barbarians with dull and primitive culture and which are not able to survive without the help of a white man.

Such state of affairs existed during the life of Rudyard Kipling. Being born in Bombay, he knew about the situation firsthand. He was born in an English family that is why he was not treated like an inhabitant of a colony, though he loved India and the East very much. That is why his poem The White Man's Burden was a great surprise for society and divided it into two camps.

The poem was written and devoted to Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee, though American colonization of the Philippines changed its original purpose. Kipling used this poem to describe his reaction to this event. In this work, he describes a great mission of white men which have to colonize and rule the rest of the world, bringing civilization and culture to backward peoples.

It is not difficult to guess, that such provocative and chauvinist appeal could not be ignored. That is why a great number of discussions were connected with this issue. The problem is, that it was the end of the 19th century and people started thinking about humanism and tolerance. Taking this fact into account, Kipling's poem can be taken as racial and arrogant, as he elevates one nation while underlining secondary character of another. He calls representatives of colonies "new-caught, sullen peoples, Half-devil and half-child" (Kipling 7-8), underlining their necessity to be ruled as they are not able to create their own state.
