course Seminar Texte zur postkolonialen Theorie language English abstract Edward Said 1935 2003 has been widely praised as a leading thinker of post colonialism and even as one of its founding figures Moreover he became one of the most widely known and controversial intellectuals in the world during his lifetime Ashcroft 2009 1 His best known book Orientalism 1978 is a milestone in post colonial theory and was one of the first examples for combining French critical theory with Anglophone cultural and textual tradition cf Castro Varela 2005 31 It actually paved the way for differentiating critical Postcolonial Studies from the earlier Commonwealth Literary Studies with their uncritical continuation of colonial prejudices cf ibid 23 Even Daniel Varisco 2007 who argues for a rather critical view of Said s work concedes that Said s book stimulated a necessary and valuable debate among scholars who study the Middle East Islam and colonial history Varisco 2007 XII Since a 10 page term paper could never do justice to a literary and scientific masterpiece like Orientalism this paper picks out just a small detail of its rich content In the third and last chapter of Orientalism Said introduces a distinction between two forms of Orientalism latent and manifest The meaning of this dichotomy does not reveal its full significance at first reading What exactly did Said have in mind by using this terminology perhaps unconsciously in addition to what he writes about it on some 20 pages of his book Several scholars have commented on this distinction and its significance for Said s work This paper will build on that material and attempt to analyze and summarize what can be found out about the dichotomy Particular interest will be devoted to the philosophical roots Said was referring to when writing about latent and manifest Orientalism Was he influenced by Arab Philosophy in using the dichotomy Did he use the terms in the psychoanalytical sense introduced by Sigmund Freud and also used by Jacques Lacan How do some of Said s critics like Maria do Mar Castro Varela Daniel Martin Varisco or John McLeod interpret and evaluate the distinction
