Critiques And Addresses By Thomas Huxley:

Critiques and Addresses, by Thomas Huxley Thomas Henry Huxley, 2004-01-01 Critiques and Addresses

Thomas Henry Huxley, 1873 The Critiques and addresses gathered together in this volume like the Lay sermons addresses and reviews published three years ago deal chiefly with educational scientific and philosophical subjects and in fact indicate the high water mark of the various tides of occupation by which I have been carried along since the beginning of the year

Henry Huxley X PREFACE opinions of Father Suarez has placed him So much more in fact has Mr Mivart's ingenuity impressed me than any other feature of his reply that I shall take the liberty of re stating the main issue between us and for the present leaving that issue alone to the judgment of the public In his book on the Genesis of Species Mr Mivart after discussing the opinions of sundry Catholic writers of authority among whom he especially includes St Augustin St Thomas Aquinas and the Jesuit Suarez proceeds to say It is then evident that ancient and most venerable theological authorities distinctly assert derivative creation and thus their teachings harmonize with all that modern science can possibly require By the derivative creation of organic forms Mr Mivart understands that God created them by conferring on the material world the power to evolve them under suitable conditions On the contrary I proved by evidence which Mr Mivart does not venture to impugn that Suarez in his Tractatus de Opere sex Dierum expressly rejects St Augustin's and St Thomas views that he vehemently advocates the literal interpretation of the account of the creation given in the Book of Genesis and that he treats with utter scorn the notion that the Almighty could have used the language of that Book unless He meant it to be taken literally 1 I regret that in one part of my essay on Mr Darwin's Critics I re the sense and not the very words of this passage as a quotation and that by an oversight the inverted commas remain in the present edition see p 267 PBEFACJS xi Mr Mivart therefore either has read Suarez and has totally misrepresented him a hypothesis which I hope I need hardly say I do not for a moment entertain or he has got his information at second hand and has himself been deceived But in that case it is surely an imprudence on his part to reproach me with having read Suarez ad hoc and evidently without the guidance of anyone familiar with that author No doubt in the matter of guidance Mr Mivart has the advantage of me Nevertheless the guides who supplied him with his references to Suarez Metaphysica while they left him in ignorance of the existence of the Tractatus are guides with whose services it might be better to dispense leaders who wilfully shut their eyes being even more liable to lodge one in a ditch than blind leaders Contents Administrative nihilism The school boards what they can do and what they may do
