Cross Of Empire:

Crossing Empire's Edge Erik Esselstrom, 2020-02-29 For more than half a century the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs Gaimusho possessed an independent police force that operated within the space of Japan's informal empire on the Asian continent Charged with protecting and controlling local Japanese communities first in Korea and later in China these consular police played a critical role in facilitating Japanese imperial expansion during the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries Remarkably however this police force remains largely unknown Crossing Empire's Edge is the first book in English to reveal its complex history Based on extensive analysis of both archival and recently published Japanese sources Erik Esselstrom describes how the Gaimusho police became deeply involved in the surveillance and suppression of the Korean independence movement in exile throughout Chinese treaty ports and the Manchurian frontier during the 1920s and 1930s It had in fact evolved over the years from a relatively benign public security organization into a full fledged political intelligence apparatus devoted to apprehending purveyors of dangerous thought throughout the empire Furthermore the history of consular police operations indicates that ideological crime was a borderless security problem Gaimusho police worked closely with colonial and metropolitan Japanese police forces to target Chinese Korean and Japanese suspects alike from Shanghai to Seoul to Tokyo Esselstrom thus offers a nuanced interpretation of Japanese expansionism by highlighting the transnational links between consular colonial and metropolitan policing of subversive political movements during the prewar and wartime eras In addition by illuminating the fervor with which consular police often pressed for unilateral solutions to Japan's political security crises on the continent he challenges orthodox understandings of the relationship between civil and military institutions within the imperial Japanese state While historians often still depict the Gaimusho as an inhibitor of unilateral military expansionism during the first half of the twentieth century Esselstrom's expos on the activities and ideology of the consular police dramatically challenges this narrative Revealing a far greater complexity of motivation behind the Japanese colonial mission Crossing Empire's Edge boldly illustrates how the imperial Japanese state viewed political security at home as inextricably connected to political security abroad from as early as 1919 nearly a decade before overt military aggression began and approaches northeast Asia as a region of intricate and dynamic social economic and political forces In doing so Crossing Empire's Edge inspires new ways of thinking about both modern Japanese history and the modern history of Japan in East Asia

Dockers' Stories from the SWW Henry T. Bradford, 2012-02-29 Dockers' Stories from the Second World War is a collection of several true stories drawn from Henry Bradford's thirty two years as a Registered Docker in the Port of London revealing the daring deeds of docklands men in the Second World War Men were often killed and injured during their every day work on the docks nonetheless never was the bravery of these men so tested as during times of war Henry heard many stories from dockers in his time working the docks but it was their wartime adventures that seemed most vivid tales of bravery and escapades of men who once the wars they had fought in were over returned to work in the docklands of the Port of London on the river Thames in sailing barges or on coastal or continental short sea trading vessels Henry Bradford's lively stories and colourful characters reveal the bravery of ordinary men in the Second World War from Captain Jim Fryer's ship towage work on Calais roads and Dunkirk beaches and saving lives of survivors from the bombed hospital ship Paris for which he was awarded the DSC to Petty Officer Jack Hicks quieter but equally memorable posting steering a clinker built boat on a hush hush job from the Thames to the north east his crew consisting only of an inexperienced co man and an incredibly efficient WREN
