Dictionary of TRUE ETYMOLOGIES

acorn (fruit of the oak). The word has long been popularly associated, understandably enough, with 'corn' and 'oak', and was spelt obcorn and overtorn only a few centuries ago. Its real origin lies in Old English aecorn, related to Latin ager 'field' (as in agriculture) and modern English acre. The link is in the source of the acorn, which is the natural fruit of a tree that grows in fields.

cannibal (eater of human flesh). For many years attempts were made to relate this word to Latin canis 'dog', since cannibals were greedy and ate flesh voraciously, as a dog does. But the word actually relates to 'Caribbean' and came to English from Spanish caníbal. This was the word used by Columbus to refer to the native Caribs of Cuba and Haiti, who subsequently acquired a reputation (possibly unfairly) for being cannibals. The native name is said to mean 'brave people'.

halyard (rope for hoisting or lowering something). There is no connection with 'yard' here, in the nautical sense or any other, although the first part of the word certainly links up with 'haul' and even more closely with 'hale' (in the sense 'compel to go, as when someone is 'haled' into court). So as it stands the word, at face value, offers part true etymology, part false. For another misleading 'yard', see lamyard.

jailbird (prisoner). The jargon word does not refer to a female prisoner, a 'bird' in jail, but to the concept of a caged bird. In fact the words 'cage' and 'jail' (and 'can't' are all related, and derive from Latin caeco 'cage' (as 'cave' also does). The slang expression 'in bird', however, meaning 'serve a prison sentence', seems to derive from rhyming slang ('birdlime' = 'time'), although the influence of the last part of 'jailbird' must have had a hand here, too.

lampoon (written attack on a person, satire). The word looks as if it might derive from 'lamp' in some way, as if the words of ridicule were displayed on a lamp post. The association of words ending in 'oon' with a French origin, too (balloon from ballon, dragon from dragon, and so on) perhaps subconsciously recalls 'lamp post' practices of the French Revolution (cf. la guillotine being the cry to hang an 'enemy of the people' from a lamp post). And although there is a French word lampeau, meaning a kind of oil-burning lamp, the origin of 'lampoon' is probably in French lampons 'let us drink', a common refrain in drinking songs.

Dictionary Of True Etymologies:

A Dictionary of True Etymologies Adrian Room, 1986      A Bibliography of English Etymology Anatoly Liberman, Ari Hoptman, Nathan E. Carlson, 2010 Distinguished linguistics scholar Anatoly Liberman set out the frame for this volume in An Analytic Dictionary of English Etymology Here Liberman's landmark scholarship lay the groundwork for his forthcoming multivolume analytic dictionary of the English language A Bibliography of English Etymology is a broadly conceptualized reference tool that provides source materials for etymological research For each word's etymology there is a bibliographic entry that lists the word origin's primary sources specifically where it was first found in use Featuring the history of more than 13 000 English words their cognates and their foreign antonyms this is a full fledged compendium of resources indispensable to any scholar of word origins

Discovering Words Julian Walker, 2013-01-20 For centuries English has assimilated words from other languages Julian Walker offers a treasury of word histories showing the variety of ways in which the words we use have evolved The book is arranged into subjects within which a selection of words are traced back through the stages by which they came to be part of the English language and through more recent changes over time in form and meaning Historical dictionaries such as Johnson's and Webster's are referenced throughout especially where there has been disagreement over the histories and proper form of words Discovering Words provides an enticing introduction to the subject of etymology showing how the words we use hold the histories of human interaction and communication
