two princes with the consent of their mother the cutting out of the tongue and lopping off of the hands of the victim who appears on the stage immediately with her violators the cutting off by a trick of one hand of her father the central character who in turn having caused the violators to be bound and gagged cuts their throats their victim holding with her arms the basin for their blood whereafter their heads are baked by him and his daughter in pies of which their guilty mother partakes To complete the odious circle the ravished heroine had beforehand found the other woman the Empress of Rome in the company of a Moor and had commented on the situation in the language of the pot house whence the manner of the revenge If this play be the first work of Shakespeare we are shut up to the conclusion that he who of all the dramatists of his age developed the most exquisite taste began by exhibiting the very worst that he who most profoundly spiritualised tragedy began by brutalising it beyond the utmost measure of his competitors Is it probable I Preliminary Scientific Tests Certainly the a priori improbability
