Three Contemporary Issues in Development Economics Muhammad Abdullah Ali Malik, 2022 This dissertation presents a three essay study in modern empirical development economics In each chapter I investigate an important economics issue that affects the developing world and the world as a whole in my final chapter land property rights risk management amongst the food insecure agrarian households and COVID 19 impacts on firm revenue and employment The existing empirical literature on the relationships between land property rights and agricultural investment and productivity has provided weak and mixed results The first chapter paper focuses on a unique land tenure system in Uganda characterized by overlapping rights to investigate causal relationships between perceived land tenure security and land attached investments To overcome concerns about the endogenous equilibrium relationship between tenure security and investment we instrument for tenure security with the mode of acquisition for respective farmlands The empirical analysis reveals that land tenure differences significantly affect land attached investments but only for long term investments chiefly erosion control facilities which may enhance perceived tenure security We however are unable to find a direct link between perceived land tenure security and agricultural productivity augmenting the hypothesis that tenure security indirectly affects productivity via impact on land attached investments We recognize the importance of perceived land tenure security as a critical ally of formal institutions in encouraging land investments Hence some form of tenure agreements or land inventory including occupancy certificates that award separate rights to tenants are proposed as policy reforms The existing empirical literature on risk management and household welfare requires further research on adoption of appropriate risk management strategies necessary to reduce exposure to risk accruing from natural and economic shocks The second paper analyzes a unique program in Senegal to understand the impact of multiple risk management tools on food security outcomes Propensity Score Matching PSM technique was used to overcome selection concerns The empirical analysis affirmed the importance of risk management strategies and revealed that participation in the program did lead to improvement in food security outcomes Additionally disaggregation by program components suggested that bundling interventions can equally if not more contribute to favorable food security outcomes since stand alone interventions would not necessarily help those facing multiple constraints or would do so to a lesser extent While it is clear that many government policies including lockdown restrictions will have a direct impact on the private sector the breadth and depth of its effects are still unclear to many especially the policy makers So how does the COVID 19 pandemic affect world population and its productive capacity The third paper makes use of Oxford University's COVID 19 Government Response Tracker together with World Bank's Business Pulse and Enterprise Surveys to study 70 countries and address this question Using basic scatter plots and panel regression I conclude that variation in lockdown stringency across the globe impacted firm behavior and adaptations accordingly The severe the lockdown the higher the loss in average sales and employment related responses experienced by firms This study also discusses the forward looking behavior nature of firms and makes the argument that previous experiences pertaining to lockdown and COVID 19 plays on firms mind as they prepare for future decision making regarding employment and production Regarding this I also show that there is a positive correlation between a firm's future sales expectation and their current sales performance Together the three chapters aim to apply careful research strategies in conjunction with economic theory to provide policy relevant evidence towards improving outcomes in the developing world

Development Economics in the Twenty-First Century Claudia Sunna, Davide Gualerzi, 2015-12-14

Development Economics has been identified as a homogeneous body of theory since the 1950s concerned both with the study of development issues and with the shaping of more effective policies for less advanced economies Development Economics in the Twenty First Century brings together an international contributor team in order to explore the origins and evolution of development economics This book highlights the different elements of high development theory through a precise reconstruction of the different theoretical approaches that developed between the 1950s and the 1970s These include the theory of balanced and unbalanced growth theory the debate on international trade the concept of dualism dependency theory structuralism and the analysis of poverty and institutions The chapters highlight the relevance and usefulness of these analyses for the contemporary theoretical debate on development issues Comparative perspectives are explored and analysed including those of Keynes Hirschman Krugman and Stiglitz The chapters situate development economics within current debates among economists and historians of economic thought providing a platform for future research This book is suitable for researchers and students with an interest in Development Economics the History of Economic development and the Economics of Developing Countries

Development Economics : From the Poverty to the Wealth of Nations

Yujiro Hayami, 2001-02-15 A comprehensive and systematic account of the core topics in development economics this book examines the reasons why a few countries have achieved a high level of affluence while the majority remain poor and stagnant It represents an original combination of classical political economy modern institutional theory and current development issues bound together through the East Asian development experience This fully revised second edition also analyses some recent changes and newly emerged problems relevant to the global economy This textbook provides a comprehensive systematic treatise on development economics combining classical political economy modern institutional theory and current development issues It has grown out of thirty years experience of teaching undergraduate and postgraduate students in the United States Japan and other parts of Asia The treatment is global although the organizing principle is the East Asian development experience Quantitative characteristics of Third World development in terms of population growth natural resource depletion capital accumulation and technological change are outlined but the central approach is comparative institutional analysis Development Economics addresses one major question Why has a small set of countries achieved a high level of affluence while the majority remain poor and stagnant Why in turn has the number of developing economies set on the track of closing their productivity gap with advanced economies have been so limited. One obvious factor underlying this global divergence is unevenness in the ability to adopt and develop advanced technology due in large measure to the difficulty experienced by low income economies in preparing appropriate institutions for borrowing advanced technology given their social and cultural constraints. The major task of this volume is to explore the nature of these binding constraints with the aim of identifying the means to remove them. Comparisons are made with countries where the constraints have been successfully lifted, most notably Japan and East Asian NIEs. This fully revised and updated second edition also incorporates analyses of several recent changes and newly emerged problems relevant to the global economy: the 1997-98 financial crisis in East Asia, the Kyoto Protocol signed in 1997 at the Third Conference of Parties for the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the deceleration in growth of agricultural productivity in Asia. Exploration of these issues provides important lessons on how to sustain economic growth based on technology borrowing.

International Economic Development Tony Fu-Lai Yu, Yuen Wai-Kee, Diana Kwan, 2014-03-14. Written by experts in their respective areas, this book is an excellent review of theories, policies and empirical evidence on important topics in global economic development. The book is both a superb teaching tool and a valuable handbook in development economics. The volume compiled 13 articles on contemporary issues influencing the world development. The book covers issues ranging from global financial crisis, the rise of China and the world economic order, multinational corporations, sweat factories and social responsibilities to Japan's nuclear meltdown and sustainable development. The book highlights the impacts of globalization on human well-being and examines the relationship between developed and developing economies in the global perspective. With cases and box illustration, this book is an essential reader for undergraduate students in economic development, international development and development economics. It is also a great reference for more advanced students as well as a very useful guide to policymakers and practitioners interested in recent advances in global development. The Palgrave Handbook of Development Economics Machiko Nissanke, José Antonio Ocampo, 2020-08-28. This Handbook responds to the needs and aspirations of current and future generations of development economists by providing critical reference material alongside or in relation to mainstream propositions. Despite the potential of globalisation in accelerating growth and development in low and middle income countries through the spread of technology, knowledge and information, its current practice in many parts of the world has led to processes that are socially, economically and politically and ecologically unsustainable. It is critical for development economists to engage with the pivotal question of how to change the nature and course of globalisation to make it work for inclusive and sustainable development. Applying a critical and pluralistic approach, the chapters in this Handbook examine economics of development paths under globalisation, focusing on sustainable development in social, environmental, institutional and political economy dimensions. It aims at advancing the frontier of development economics in these key aspects and generating more refined policy perspectives. It is critically reflective in examining effects of globalisation on development paths to date and in terms of methodological and analytical approaches as well as forward thinking in policy perspectives with a view to laying a foundation for sustainable development
