

Mechanism of action

Implants continually release a small amount of progestin steadily into the blood.

The contraceptive effect of implants is achieved through a combination of mechanisms.

The primary mechanisms are:

- Increased viscosity of the cervical mucus making it harder for sperm to swim through (effect starts within 48-72 hours after insertion of implants)
- Inhibition of ovulation in about 50% of menstrual cycles

The secondary mechanism:

- Suppression of endometrial growth so that it is less receptive to implantation
