Control Of Fish Migration:

The Control of Fish Migration R.J.F. Smith, 2012-12-06 Fish migration is important and spectacular. Migratory fish gather energy in one portion of the environment and transport it to other areas where it often becomes available to humans or to other elements in the ecosystem. Migration brings fish into situations that allow easy harvest as they concentrate along migration routes. Their journeys also make them vulnerable to human interference at critical points along their route. Salmon, for example, may harvest plankton in the open ocean and transport that food energy to coastal and inland regions where it is captured by fisheries or deposited in inland streams and utilized by the flora and fauna of the region. These salmon are able to complete journeys of thousands of kilometers from their natal streams to oceanic feeding grounds and back to the same home streams, an accomplishment that strains our credibility. We now understand some of the timing and guiding stimuli used in these migrations and mechanisms can be logically proposed on the basis of the established abilities of fishes to account for the unexplained portions of the migrations. There is no single factor guiding these fish. Instead, they are dependent on the presence in their environment of a great variety of appropriate orienting and timing stimuli. These stimuli are vulnerable to human interference. The more widespread and easily available the information on these requirements, the more readily fish can be protected from such interference.

Control and Timing of Fish Migration William Stewart Hoar, 1953. Investigations of the physiological control of fish migration have been confined to anadromous and katadromous species. Progress might be more rapid if studies were conducted on species in which migration is not complicated by change of osmotic medium. Various mechanisms are involved in the downstream migration of juvenile salmon. Schooling species are active at night and swim near the surface. They are therefore displaced downstream shortly after hatching. Elevated temperatures and increased thyroid activity sometimes modify reactions to current and hasten downstream movement. Stream dwelling species are related to the bottom, showing territorial behaviour by day and inactivity at night. A distinct transformation occurs prior to seaward migration. One lake dwelling species, Oncorhynchus nerka, remains in fresh water initially because of its negative phototaxis and inactivity. It likewise undergoes a transformation before leaving the lake. The parr smolt transformation involves morphological, biochemical, and ethological changes and is associated with increased endocrine activity. Seaward migration of other diadromous species is probably controlled by mechanisms similar to those of salmon. Increased activity in thyroid gland and gonads is frequently associated with the change in response to current which must occur when the feeding migration ceases and the spawning migration commences. Treatment with thyroid and gonadic hormones increases the activity of salmon. In most fish that migrate upstream, one or both of these hormones is implicated. Precise patterns of migration are dependent upon a delicate interrelationship between the fish and the cyclical changes in its environment.

An Introduction to Fish Migration Pedro Morais, Francoise Daverat, 2016-04-21. Since the publication of The Migrations of Fish by Prof. Alexander Meek in 1916, a number of books have been published on this subject. However, most of these books only cover one type of migratory mechanisms This book aims to overcome this drawback by presenting a comprehensive coverage of all life history strategies potadromy anadromy catadrom Water Resources Research Catalog ,1966 Water Resources Thesaurus United States. McCleave,2013-03-13 The last major synthesis of our knowledge of fish migration and the underlying transport and guidance phenomena both physical and biological was Fish Migration published 16 years ago by F R Harden Jones 1968 That synthesis was based largely upon what could be gleaned by classical fishery biology techniques such as tagging and recapture studies commercial fishing statistics and netting and trapping studies Despite the fact that Harden Jones also provided with a good deal of thought and speculation a theoretical basis for studying the various aspects of fish migration and migratory orientation progress in this field has been with a few exceptions piecemeal and more disjointed than might have been expected Thus we welcomed the approach from the NATO Marine Sciences Programme Panel and the encouragement from F R Harden Jones to develop a proposal for and ultimately to organize a NATO Advanced Research Institute ARI on mechanisms of fish migration Substantial progress had been made with descriptive analytical and predictive approaches to fish migration since the appearance of Fish Migration Both because of the progress and the often conflicting results of research we felt that the time was again right and the effort justified to synthesize and to critically assess our knowledge Our ultimate aim was to identify the gains and shortcomings and to develop testable hypotheses for the next decade or two
