Development And Democratisation In Tanzania A Study Of Rural Grabroots Politics:

Development and Democratisation in Tanzania Samuel S. Mushi, 2001 Research and Education for Democracy in Tanzania Programme REDET Challenges for the Democratisation Process in Tanzania Jonas Ewald, 2011 Tanzania has been independent in 2011 for 50 years While most neighbouring states have gone through violent conflicts Tanzania has managed to implement extensive reforms without armed political conflicts Hence Tanzania is an interesting case for Peace and Development research This dissertation analyses the political development in Tanzania since the introduction of the multiparty system in 1992 with a focus on the challenges for the democratisation process in connection with the 2000 and 2005 elections The question of to what extent Tanzania had moved towards a consolidation of democracy is analysed by looking at nine different institutions of importance for democratisation grouped in four spheres the state the political civil and economic society Focus is on the development of the political society and the role of the opposition in particular The analysis is based on secondary and primary material collected between September 2000 to April 2010 The main conclusion is that even if the institutions of liberal democracy have gradually developed in practice single party rule has continued manifested in the 2005 election when the CCM won 92% of seats Despite impressive economic growth poverty remains deep and has not been substantially reduced On a theoretical level this brings the old debate between liberal and substantive democracy back to the fore Neither the economic nor the political reforms have brought about a transformation of the political and economic system resulting in the poor majority gaining substantially more political influence and improved economic conditions Hence it is argued that the interface between the economic political and administrative reforms has not been sufficiently considered in the liberal democratic tradition Liberal democracy is necessary for a democratic development but not sufficient for democracy to be consolidated For that a substantive democratic development is necessary

Becker,2019-06-20 An examination of poverty dynamics and developmental failure shifting emphasis from development as control to development as coping strategy Democratic Participation in Rural Tanzania and Zambia Satu Riutta,2009 Satu Riutta asks whether civic education initiatives to which huge sums of donor funds and effort are devoted annually actually promote political participation among the rural poor in nascent democracies Does raising awareness about citizen rights and responsibilities increase participation Are the effects of civic education greatest on collective or individual forms of participation Do women respond differently than men Drawing on a rich set of original data from villages in Tanzania and Zambia Riutta casts new light on both the empowering effects and the limitations of civic education in the context of participatory development and democratization Publisher s description Political Settlement and the Politics of Legitimation in Countries Undergoing Democratisation ,2019 From Village to State in Tanzania Clyde R.

Ingle,2020-06-30 This study explores the crucial question of how an underdeveloped country s political system can effectively promote modernization in rural areas By examining the political linkages between village systems and the national system in Tanga and Handeni Districts of Tanzania where he conducted field work in 1967 1968 the author assesses the grass roots response to President Nyerere s program for independent and self reliant development Professor Ingle also describes the close relationship of the local and national systems to the single party TANU and frames a theory of linkage applicable to the study of other developing nations Not Yet Democracy Issa G. Shivji,1998 Rural Development in Tanzania Meinrad E. Banda,1978 Political and economic development in the rural areas is a major preoccupation of Tanzania Ujamaa is a Tanzanian model of development which aims at introducing social cultural political and economic change in the rural areas in which about 93% of the population of Tanzania resides The aim of this study is to describe Ujamaa as a model of development to analyze critically its implementation problems to compare Ujamaa model with current models of community development and to propose certain modifications on the basis of principles and theories of community development The discussion of Tanzania s historical background provides a framework of the development of Ujamaa model The colonial model of rural transformation denied the peasants participation in determining the nature of their development and it was therefore opposed by the peasants Their opposition to forced agricultural changes gave rise to political awareness among the peasants during the colonial era At independence Tanzania realised that the colonial model of rural transformation had a shortcoming

It attempted to establish political institutions at the village level to enable the peasants to participate in the process of their social cultural political and economic development The creation of the Village Development Committees and the ten cell house system gave the peasants political power to control their village matters while the role of the government was to facilitate the process of local decision making During the post independence era Tanzania has been preoccupied by the development of Ujamaa The introduction of Ujamaa model has great impact on the life of the peasants The rural population has been reorganized in Ujamaa villages in response to the implementation of rural development policy In order to effectively facilitate the development of Ujamaa village s political autonomy the government administration was decentralized in 1972 to provide regional autonomy A decentralized decision making structure has been set up the Regional Development Committee District Development Committee and the Village Development Committee The study has also analyzed the implementation problems of the Ujamaa model in comparison with the Chinese model of development The study has identified four main problems ideological orientation Ujamaa ideology and the concept of development preparatory organization of the Ujamaa village and leadership at the village level Furthermore the Ujamaa model has been compared with current models of community development This thesis indicates that both the Ujamaa model and community development models are similar in their goals that is to encourage the growth of local political autonomy which enables the local people to be responsible for their social cultural political and economic development The study concludes by making a number of recommendations of which two are the most important 1 The development of local leadership should be emphasized to ensure self reliance in local human resources and 2 Politicization and democratization of the peasants should also be emphasized in order to ensure the growth of ujamaa
