Determinants of Bank Lending in Thailand Chodechai Suwanaporn,2003 Thailand experienced some of the world's fastest economic growth rates over the past four decades until the 1997 Baht devaluation and subsequent financial crisis The dramatic financial collapse has raised doubts about the general efficiency of the Thai financial system Until now empirical knowledge about the lending process or behaviour in emerging markets has been extremely thin due to the lack of appropriate and reliable data This study which uses micro level bank data examines systematic analysis of risk relationships and other factors in Thai bank lending decisions to assess the pre crisis health of the lending process Specifically it investigates factors that affect interest rates degree of lending volume and collateral setting in the loan decision of Thai banks between 1992 and 1996 The results show that Thai banks lending decisions follow a similar manner as in developed countries There are sufficient systematic structures in place not chaos as speculated by many Thai banks partly consider borrower's risk in their lending decision especially the degree of lending volume but do not make use of these risk indicators in the pricing of loans Relationship factors are important in Thai bank's lending decisions The evidence is more resounding in Thailand than in the developed countries However lending to more closely related firms is neither the cause of nor related to bad loan outcome Contents Analysing how bank lending decisions in Thailand are determined Investigating risk and relationship consideration in Thai bank lending Using unprecedented micro level bank data from credit evaluation files

An Economic Analysis of Public Good Provision in Rural Russia Daniela Lohlein,2003 Adequate access to public goods plays an important role in the economic and rural development of any country For the transition countries however providing public goods is particularly problematic owing to several factors associated with the transition process itself e.g economic recession and a change in ownership of local public goods Taking Russia as an example this study examines the effect of the transition process on rural household s access to public goods With reference to education and health care household access to public goods is addressed in terms of community availability and economic access The analysis is taken a step further through an examination of the role of informal institutions in public good provision Multiple regression analysis was used to test for the significance of income as a determinant of private expenditures on public goods The results indicate that contrary to expectations neither income nor informal payments are important determinants of access to public goods Informal institutions continue to exert a strong influence on the provision of public goods

An International Nutrition Index Doris Wiesmann,2004 Hunger and malnutrition are the plight of millions of people especially in developing countries This study argues that the lack of a comprehensive measure for nutrition and food security has impeded progress towards eradicating hunger and undernutrition The author seeks to fill this gap by designing an international Nutrition Index NI Using this NI the study ranks 106 countries and analyses patterns and trends in their nutrition situation The correlations between the NI and other international indicators show its ability to reflect micronutrient deficiencies as well as its sensitivity to poverty and inequality Multivariate regressions reveal that the NI tends to improve with economic development and the amelioration of health services whereas warfare has detrimental effects
