

Developing Occupational Health and Safety Policies and Programs

In May 2001, a number of amendments to the Occupational Health and Safety Act were proclaimed. One important amendment, effective January 1, 2002, requires employers with ten or more employees to establish and maintain a written health and safety program, and for employers with less than ten employees to establish and maintain a written health and safety policy. Specific regulations outlining the required elements of an occupational health and safety policy and program were approved by government in December 2001, and are reproduced below.

Safety Policy Definition

A health and safety policy is a written statement by an employer stating the company's commitment for the protection of the health and safety of employees and to the public. It is an endorsed commitment by management to its employees regarding their health and safety.

Details on the elements of an occupational health and safety policy are outlined in the attached Regulations.

Safety Program Definition

A health and safety program contains the health and safety elements of an organization, objectives which make it possible for the company to achieve its goal in the protection of its workers at the workplace.

Section 4.(1) of the Occupational Health and Safety Regulations specify the minimum requirements to be contained in a health and safety program. Some of the requirements specified in the regulation may not be applicable to every workplace. However, each employer should carry out their own health and safety risk assessment, in consultation with the occupational health and safety committee, to determine what hazards are present at the workplace. Once the hazards have been identified, controls for exposure to these hazards should be detailed in the health and safety program.

Details of the required elements of an occupational health and safety program are outlined in the attached
