Tjip Walker, 2017 Agricultural extension has not been particularly kind to Africa's women farmers. On a continent where women produce 90 percent of the food and 60 percent of total agricultural output, insensitivity and neglect by extension services is the norm. Numerous case studies have pointed out the gender gap that exists in the provision of extension services to women farmers. Compared to male farmers or farming couples, women farmers receive far less attention from extension services, thus benefiting less from improved farming techniques. However, in Cameroon's North West province, over the last five years, the Mission de Developpement de la Province du Nord Ouest MIDENO has been implementing a project to improve agricultural production in the province. In terms of agricultural extension, the project has hired almost 200 new extension agents, one fourth of whom are women. The overall representation of women in the extension service is now 18.3 percent, among the highest in developing countries. The paper is organized into three chapters. Chapter I deals with the agricultural and policy setting in which MIDENO was designed. Chapter II is devoted to the MIDENO case study. Chapter III attempts to generalize from the MIDENO case and determines the extent to which the MIDENO's experience and success can be sustained and replicated.

Studies on Agricultural Extension Involving Women Teresa Spens, 1986. This paper presents the results of an enquiry into extension policies and procedures undertaken in the UK, USA and Kenya during August and September 1986. The report therefore considers whether country case studies of the involvement of women in Government extension services would be useful. Technology Policy and Practice in Africa International Development Research Centre (Canada), 1995. Technology Policy and Practice in Africa Routledge Handbook of Gender and Agriculture Carolyn E. Sachs, Leif Jensen, Paige Castellanos, Kathleen Sexsmith, 2020-10-28. The Routledge Handbook of Gender and Agriculture covers major theoretical issues as well as critical empirical shifts in gender and agriculture. Gender relations in agriculture are shifting in most regions of the world with changes in the structure of agriculture, the organization of production, international restructuring of value chains, climate change, the global pandemic, and national and multinational policy changes. This book provides a cutting edge assessment of the field of gender and agriculture with contributions from both leading scholars and up and coming academics as well as policymakers and practitioners. The handbook is organized into four parts: part 1 institutions, markets and policies; part 2 land, labor and agrarian transformations; part 3 knowledge, methods and access to information; and part 4 farming people and identities. The last chapter is an epilogue from many of the contributors focusing on gender, agriculture and shifting food systems during the coronavirus pandemic. The chapters address both historical subjects as well as ground breaking work on gender and agriculture which will help to chart the future of the field. The handbook has an international focus with contributions examining issues at both the global and local levels with contributors from across the world With contributions from leading academics policymakers and practitioners and with a global outlook the Routledge Handbook of Gender and Agriculture is an essential reference volume for scholars students and practitioners interested in gender and agriculture Chapter 13 of this book is freely available as a downloadable Open Access PDF at <http://www.taylorfrancis.com> under a Creative Commons Attribution Non Commercial No Derivatives CC BY NC ND 4.0 license
