are the prospects for Uganda s future Essays by the top scholars in the field span the breadth of the issue from Uganda s children the sick the elderly and often adult able bodied men as well In some countries they work more than fifteen sixteen hours a day tilling the fields fetching water carrying firewood and cooking because their prime responsibility is of home makers When it is stated that in East Africa the home is the responsibility of women the statement is not to be interpreted lightly It does not simply refer to the cleaning cooking and childcare but also to the production and preparation of all that goes into making her home It is well established that east african rural women have had a strong historic and continuing role in food production processing and marketing They have the highest female participation rate in agriculture of all regions of the world Even then they are not considered as significant contributors to east african economy and their back breaking contribution falls outside the scope of official statistical statistics resulting in their exclusion from legal power i e ownership of land and facilities such as credit or technological advancement training The present book tries to have a look into the lives of these neglected contributors with the hope that the policy makers would take women s concern into their plans and programmes
