

Globalisation and its adverse effects have begun affecting the community to a great extent. Globalisation is an economic phenomenon, and sustainability development of a nation involves the effective socio-economic standard of living without depletion of the natural resources. The human societies are on the verge of collapse with the unsustainability in concern. Sustainability development requires the acknowledgement of the traditional origin of the ecological dysfunction. According to Yeung \(2002\), the globalisation and its nature along with the global economic change there has been an effect over the sustainability development of the nations and this has been a recent topic of research. In the article by Yeung, \(2002\), globalisation is described as a phenomenon that involves over spatialization of social relations. He says that because of the spatial tendencies, there is no independent existence of globalization apart from the social, economic, political and technological forces and thus cannot be organised to explain empirical outcomes in the absence of these forces.

According to Steve Connelly (2007), sustainability development is considered to be everything and nothing and this is a weakened policy goal since in the promotion of environmental sustainability, is hampered due to the tensions between globalisation and sustainability development. The author in his paper examines the dominant responses to the ambiguities of sustainability development and introduces the contrasting idea of what affects the sustainability. Elliot \(2013\), says that sustainability development is primarily about building friendly relations with the environmental natural resources over which the standards of living of the society depends. On the other hand, according to Yapa \(1993\) the Third World people do not have the basic means of sustenance. Even after the four decades of properly planned economic improvement.

Law, and Sustainable Development in the Global South (Entire Book in Open Access). Paolo Davide Farah, Kirk W. Junker, 2023 Globalization is a word with many meanings Some people say globalization is responsible for having lifted millions of people out of poverty over the past decades Other people say that globalization is neocolonialism All will agree that the processes that accompany globalization have had tremendous impacts on the environment Commodification of the environment along with environmental degradation have led to an almost universal awareness of the negative effects of such crises as disrupted climate The conservation and restoration of the environment as well as the protection of biodiversity are essential for human life including its economic components The international community has responded to the challenge by shifting away from the Brundtland Commission's intergenerational concept of development which meets the needs of current generations without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs to equating development with economic development under the New York Convention and reserving a third and separate pillar for economics over and against social concern and the environment However promising the concepts sustainable development and sustainability may have been they have become overused and meaningless Like worn out coins they became just placeholders To re inscribe meaning in the metal of sustainable development the authors in this book examine environmental problems caused facilitated or exacerbated by globalization as seen from the perspectives of the Global South and emerging economies Investments trade and technological advances are key driving forces of transition in these countries The economic development component also known as green growth policies may be preferred by globalizing forces which also regard it as most suitable to cope with climate disruption for example With the globalization of economics comes some aspects of the globalization of law The globalization of environmental law that is currently under formation in the Global South addresses the integration of the ecological and economic components by analyzing the contribution of emerging and developing economies Sometimes environmental law is part of the solutions sometimes environmental law is part of the problems In this book the terms Global South and emerging economies are included as alternative conceptualizations to the developed and developing countries But this alternative conceptualization itself is a divide that enables globalization In the chapters of this book the perspectives of the Global South and emerging economies are presented by lawyers from Brazil Ethiopia India Mongolia Nigeria and St Vincent and the Grenadines as well as from the European states of France Georgia Germany and Slovakia The authors are natives of either emerging economies or of the Global South or work extensively in those regions All of the book's themes are mentioned in the title globalization environmental law sustainable development the Global South implementation and challenges

Globalisation, Economic Transition and the Environment Philip Lawn, 2013 This book focuses on three critical issues pertaining to the broader goal of sustainable development namely the degenerative forces of globalization ecological sustainability requirements and how best to negotiate the economic transition process While the applicability of ecological sustainability to sustainable development is obvious the association between economic transition and sustainable development and more particularly how globalization forces can impact negatively on the sustainable development process is poorly understood Philip Lawn brings together some of the leading practitioners in the field of sustainable development to discuss these issues and to outline ways to achieve sustainable development without the perceived need for continuous growth The book culminates with a number of policy recommendations and institutional modifications to assist nations and the global community to achieve sustainable development This book will prove invaluable for academics and researchers in ecological environmental and natural resource economics as well as sustainable development globalization and international trade Practitioners and policy makers at all levels will find this resource both interesting and instrumental to their work Contributors M Borucke M Clarke M Cole R Costanza H Daly P Fredriksson A Galli T Jackson I Kubiszewski P Lawn E Lazarus S Mattoon W Rees J Rockström W Steffen P Victor M Wackernagel

Globalization and Sustainable Human Development Charles Harvey, 2002

the world's richest 80 people had as much wealth as the poorest 50 per cent of the world's population. It is a global unevenness through which the barriers to the migration of Third World migrants to wealthy First World nations go ever higher while the barriers to travel in the reverse direction are all but extinct. So how exactly does tourism contribute to narrowing this glaring inequality between the rich and poor? Are ever-expanding tourism markets a smoke-free, socioculturally sensitive form of human industrialisation? Is alternative tourism really a credible lever for reducing global inequality and eliminating poverty? Tourism and Sustainability critically explores the most significant universal geopolitical norms of the last half century: development, globalisation and sustainability, and through the lens of new forms of tourism demonstrates how we can better get to grips with the rapidly changing new global order. The fourth edition has been extensively revised and updated and benefits from the addition of new material on climate change and tourism. Drawing on a range of examples from across the Third World, Mowforth and Munt expertly illustrate the social, economic and environmental conditions that continue to affect the tourism industry. With the first edition hailed by Geoffrey Wall as one of the most significant books produced on tourism since the turn of the millennium, Tourism and Sustainability remains the essential resource for students of human geography, environmental sciences and studies, politics, development studies, anthropology and business studies, as well as tourism itself.

Globalisation, FDI, Regional Integration and Sustainable Development Anthony Bende-Nabende, 2017-10-05. This title was first published in 2002. Anthony Bende-Nabende focuses on the ongoing globalization process which has sparked an unprecedented world-wide debate. He provides a one-stop centre for a balanced coverage of the theoretical, empirical and policy issues linking globalization with foreign direct investment, regional economic integration and economic growth and sustainable development. This stimulating book comprehensively explores the theoretical and empirical literature, inter-linking the aforementioned factors from the anti-globalization activists' viewpoint and from the pro-globalization proponents' perspective. It proposes policies that individual countries should pursue based on the recognition that globalization generates both positive and negative effects. These comprise policies required to maximise the economic benefits globalization may generate and those that aim to eliminate or at least minimize the negative development-oriented effects globalization may engender and hence to propel sustainable development. The book will be an essential guide for students, academics and those involved in international economics, environmental studies, international relations and growth and development studies.
