Unbuilding Cities Anique Hommels, 2008-08-29 City planning initiatives and redesign of urban structures often become mired in debate and delay. Despite the fact that cities are considered to be dynamic and flexible spaces never finished but always under construction, it is very difficult to change existing urban structures; they become fixed, obdurate, securely anchored in their own histories as well as in the histories of their surroundings. In Unbuilding Cities, Anique Hommels looks at the tension between the malleability of urban space and its obduracy, focusing on sites and structures that have been subjected to unbuilding, redesign, or reconfiguration. She brings the concepts of science and technology studies (STS) to bear on the study of cities. Viewing the city as a large sociotechnological artifact, she demonstrates the usefulness of STS tools that were developed to analyze other technological artifacts and explores in detail the role of obduracy in sociotechnical change. Her analysis distinguishes three concepts of obduracy: interactionist, in which actors with diverging views are constrained by fixed ways of thinking and interacting; relational, in which change is difficult because of technology's embeddedness in sociotechnical networks; and enduring, in which persistent traditions influence the development of technology over time. Hommels examines the tensions between obduracy and change in three urban redesign projects in the Netherlands: a renovated city center that fell into drabness and disrepair, a highway system that runs through a densely populated urban area, and a high-rise housing project designed according to modernist precepts and built for middle-class families that became a haven for unemployment and crime. Unbuilding Cities contributes to a productive fusion of STS and urban studies.

Adaptation to Climate Change: A Spatial Challenge Rob Roggema, 2010-03-12 As it becomes clear that climate change is not easily within the boundaries of the 1990s, society needs to be prepared and needs to anticipate future changes due to the uncertain changes in climate. So far, extensive research has been carried out on several issues, including coastal defence or shifting ecozones. However, the role spatial design and planning can play in adapting to climate change has not yet been focused on. This book illuminates the way adaptation to climate change is tackled in water management, ecology, coastal defence, the urban environment, and energy. The question posed is how each sector can anticipate climate change by creating spatial designs and plans. The main message of this book is that spatial design and planning are a very useful tool in adapting to climate change. It offers an integral view on the issue; it is capable in dealing with uncertainties and it opens the way to creative and anticipative solutions. Dealing with adaptation to climate change requires a shift in mindset from a technical, rational way of thinking towards an integral, proactive one. A new era in spatial design and planning looms on the horizon.

Metacity Datatown Winy Maas, MVRDV (Firm), 1999 An attempt to understand the contemporary city at a moment when globalisation has exploded its scale beyond our grasp. Abandoning topography, ideology, representation, and context, the authors resort to pure data to discover what agenda for architecture and urbanism a numerical approach could provoke. Provided by publisher Metropolitan World Atlas Arjen van Susteren, 2005 With its wealth of facts and clean abstract

Moral Sentiments in Modern Society Gabriël Brink, 2025-10-01 Since the time of Adam Smith scholars have tried to understand the role moral sentiments play in modern life an issue that became especially urgent during and after the 2008 global financial crisis Previous explanations have ranged from the idea that modern society is built on moral values to the notion that modernisation results in moral decay The essays in this interdisciplinary volume use the example of Dutch society and a wealth of empirical data to propose a novel theory about the ambivalent relation between contemporary life and human nature In the process the contributors argue for the need to reject simplistic explanations and reinvent civil society
