1 | WHAT IS NEW OR DIFFERENT

- In this update, the general guidelines regarding the gold standard of ambulatory care for children, adolescents, and young adults with type 1 diabetes (T1D) have been revised.
- Guidance on current diabetes technology has been expanded to include relevant information on telemedicine, data support, education and literacy.
- Updated guidance on type 2 diabetes (T2D) ambulatory care is provided.

2 | EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

2.1 | Introduction

- From diagnosis, the child or adolescent with diabetes and their caregivers must receive education and care from a multidisciplinary diabetes team comprised of specialists with training and expertise in both diabetes and pediatrics, including child and adolescent development. B

- The diabetes team should implement a person-centered care model, where the persons with diabetes and their family are the central members of the care team. B
- Clear and consistent communication around education and treatment plans is essential. C
- Current technologies commensurate with available resources and the individual child's/family's needs should be integrated into the treatment plan. C
- It is important to empower children and families with the awareness that diabetes is a condition that can be managed and avoid the young person with diabetes being defined by the condition ("the diabetic child" or "the sick child"); and use language that engages and motivates children and families towards dynamic diabetes management.
