Why Youth Vote Bobbi Gentry,2017-12-01 This book examines the reasons why young people vote Viewing political behavior through a psychological lens this book uses psychological developmental models to test the theory of political identity development and explain how and why young people vote Rather than studying why young people do not vote as the majority of the literature does the book discusses the mechanisms and purpose behind youth voting Themes of the text include identifying how political identities develop in young people how leaders can contribute to identity development and how we can explain differences between young Independents who will vote and those who will not The first chapter engages the reader with the background for each theoretical element of the book and develops the argument for the book as a whole Three major substantive chapters discuss and test the theories of political identity development political leadership as identity role models and how we misunderstand political independence by not taking into account why young people might choose to identify as an Independent The final chapter discusses implications for upcoming elections and how this research might better inform people and institutions interested in increasing youth turnout to reformulate their approach An overarching discussion of identity and the political components of identity development this book will be of interest to political scientists studying public opinion and voting behavior campaigns and elections and political psychology as well as practitioners such as civic engagement and youth voting groups who wish to engage young people in the political process

Voting Patterns of the United States Supreme Court John D. Sprague, 1968 A Critique of Empirical Voting

Behavior Research as a Form of Explanation Diane S. Kaiser, 1984 Voting Behavior Samuel Long, 1987 Current Controversies in Marketing Research Leo Bogart, 1969 The Demobilization of American Voters Michael J.

Avey, 1989-12-08 This book presents an alternative empirical theory of voter turnout Named the Mobilization Demobilization Theory it analyzes voter turnout of different segments of the voting age population in terms of barriers created to prevent participation and efforts to stimulate participation This study challenges the theory that the characteristics of nonvoters low levels of education and political apathy are the root causes of poor voter turnout among persons of low socioeconomic status SES The Mobilization Demobilization Theory argues instead that nonvoting results from the behavior of politicians political elites and the political system and not from the characteristics of the poor and working class The study suggests that voter turnout for national elections could reach an 80 percent level if a major party focuses on these two groups Statistical evidence is given to show why the poor and working class do not vote when neither party represents them Chapter One of the book presents the evidence against the current theory of voter turnout the Standard Socioeconomic model Chapter Two presents the alternative theory the Mobilization Demobilization model Chapters Three and Four cover the issues of removing obstacles to voting and nonpolicy related organizational efforts This is followed by a discussion in Chapter Five of the major party focus of nonparticipants and a discussion in Chapter Six of the impact of party alignment The final chapter takes a look at mobilization and demobilization today This book makes for informative reading to anyone interested in political behavior public opinion electoral politics or political parties It should be of special interest to persons active in election activity from grassroots organizers to persons making election regulations The Korean Journal of Policy Studies, 2001

Change and Continuity In the 2004 and 2006 Elections Paul R Abramson, John H Aldrich, David W Rhode, 2007-03-09 The authors analyse the results of the 2006 US midterm elections and evaluate strategies that may dominate the presidential nomination contests for Democratic and Republican candidates in 2008
