Bhatia, 2014-11-30 The machines and processes of industry as well as the air conditioning systems for buildings generate tremendous amounts of heat which must be continuously dissipated if these machines and processes are to continue to operate efficiently Water cooling is the most efficient method of dissipating heat A cooling tower is a device used in industry to cool hot water by partial evaporation before reusing it as a coolant Water directly contacts surrounding air and a very small part 1 2% evaporate This evaporation increases the air temperature and humidity and decreases the temperature of the water making it possible to cool below the normal air temperature Although this heat is usually transferred to a cool flowing volume of water final rejection is always to the atmosphere and invariably is accomplished by some form of heat exchanger The amount of cooling that you get from a cooling tower depends on the relative humidity of the air and the barometric pressure For example the more humid the climate the lesser will be the temperature drop and vice versa This 6 hours Quick Book provides comprehensive information on cooling water systems and describes different types of cooling towers their mechanical components and the problems associated with cooling water The student must take a multiple choice quiz consisting of thirty five 35 questions at the end of this course to obtain PDH credits Learning Objective At the conclusion of this course the reader will 1 Learn different types of heat rejection systems 2 Learn the operational theory and principles of evaporative cooling tower 3 Describe the factors affecting the performance of cooling tower 4 Learn the various materials used in construction of cooling tower 5 Understand the functions of various components of cooling tower 6 Describe various control options 7 Understand the layout and installation considerations 8 Understand the water distribution mechanisms noise and vibration issues 9 Understand the cooling tower water balance 10 Learn the importance of cooling water treatment 11 Describe the cooling tower testing requirements various codes and standards 12 Learn by examples the equations to calculate the evaporation rate fresh water make up and blowdown requirements
