

David C. B. Teather. (Ed.). (2004). Consortia; International Networking Alliances of Universities. 261 pages. Melbourne, Australia: Melbourne University Press. ISBN 0-522-85096-0

The book Consortia discusses a phenomenon that became especially fashionable in the 1990s: the grouping of universities in networks, alliances, and consortia. In the introduction, David Teather makes clear that in many cases, such consortia have been introduced with high expectations, expectations that many of them have not been able to live up to. Others have however proved to be successful and have become mechanisms to help their members to understand and to adapt to changes in the wider world. In the introduction of the book, Teather presents a set of questions that position the ambitions of the book at a very high level. The book will attempt to answer such questions as why universities set up or join these consortia, why some fail and some succeed, and whether this networking fulfils its large claims.

The book is organised in an interesting way. The first two chapters lay down the more conceptual explorations of contemporary concepts such as globalisation and internationalisation and their relations to higher education and higher education consortia. The first chapter, written by David Teather, presents the context in which the networking takes place. The changing context of higher education is explored on the basis of three key processes: massification, globalisation, and internationalisation. This chapter presents an interesting account of the contemporary "big changes," although it lacks a clear connection with the topic of the book. This connection is provided for by De Wit's chapter, where the new internationalisation is presented as a reaction to globalisation processes. Based on earlier work (De Wit, 2002), De Wit presents a typology of international, multilateral organizations in higher education, where he distinguishes between academic associations, academic consortia, and institutional networks. Also, he presents a long list of dos and don'ts in international networking.

The remainder of the book provides information on five different consortia: the Association of Commonwealth Universities, the European Association of Distance Teaching Universities, CLUSTER (the Consortium Linking Universities in Science and Technology for Education and Research), LEWI (the David C. Lam Institute for East West Studies), and Universitas 21. These are presented

Consortia David C. B. Teather, 2004 Throughout the 1990s existing international higher education networks were joined by a new wave of smaller more homogeneous groupings of universities known as global consortia David Teather evaluates these new alliances Academic Collaborations in the Global Marketplace Anatoly V. Oleksiyenko, 2019-08-23 This book explains why conflict between the institutional and human agencies is an unavoidable outcome of competing local national and global agendas at a major research university It illustrates this by means of a case study of Glonacal U a university which belongs to the category of exceptional institutions that excel due to an established organizational culture of academic freedom research excellence shared governance and intellectual leadership The book shows how such a university may succumb to anxiety when neoliberal managers seek to exploit stakeholder doubts about university sufficiency relevance and performance in national and global markets and hierarchies of knowledge products and status goods As top down pressure for strategic choices in scientific partnerships increases at the world class university grassroots resistance to centralization increases also in order to remind the research university leaders that intellectual work and academic freedom are interdependent and central to building capacities for impactful global science Productive global linkages are prerogative of academics who take full responsibility for success of project implementation and outcomes in scholarship and practice
