The Age of Capitalism, Consumer Culture, and the Collapse of Nature in the Anthropocene Jack Thornburg,2024-10-02 The Age of Capitalism Consumer Culture and the Collapse of Nature in the Anthropocene argues that the stability of post industrial postmodern society is threatened by the convergence of three distinct yet interrelated crises environmental degradation capitalist economic development and the primacy of consumption and self absorption as the basis for economic development at the expense of community and social relationships Jack Thornburg contrasts advanced modern society with indigenous cultures in terms of nature and conceptions of the communal self The complex nature of capitalist oriented society has influenced how individuals conceptualize themselves The outcome the author contends is a competitive society in which individuals are alienated living in uncertain times One consequence of these crises all of which derive from the Enlightenment and the concomitant appearance and evolution of capitalism has been the destruction of a worldview balancing and connecting well being with prosperity of the natural world Money and materialism cannot buy happiness as capitalist narrative asserts Thornburg claims that the happiness sought by individuals seeking meaning through consumption can only be realized by reintegrating nature with the human spirit

Roosters at Midnight Robert Albrow, 2010-08-18 Bolivia is a nation energetically confronting stubborn legacies of second class citizenship as part of their historic process of political transformation which began in early 2000 and culminated in the election to the presidency in late 2005 of Aymara descended coca grower and opposition leader Evo Morales The civil unrest seen in those intervening years was a spectacular expression of grassroots disenchantment and a sharp rebuke to the politics of Bolivia's neoliberal democratization which began in sweeping structural adjustment measures during 1985 Set in the largely urban provincial capital of Quillacollo this book is an ethnographic examination of municipal politics in the context of renewed elections of local level officials beginning in 1987 after a hiatus of almost forty years Understanding who these people are how they think of themselves and how they relate with each other politically tells us a great deal about the everyday neopopular political ground that has steadily been moving Bolivian national politics toward a greater rapprochement with its indigenous heritage
