Overview

This course has two major learning objectives: First, the course provides a strong foundation of the five pillars essential in business: (1) understanding ethics in business and raising awareness of ethical decision making; (2) demonstrating strong communication skills by writing reports and making oral presentations; (3) developing quantitative analysis skills by analyzing and solving problems using spreadsheets; (4) developing information literacy with critical thinking, analysis, evaluation of information sources, and raising awareness of information ethics; and (5) raising awareness of the global business and management.

Second, the course provides a valuable opportunity to fully understand the five pillars and the theoretical concepts and analytical models in functional areas by conducting a comprehensive research study, the Shadow-a-Company project. This research project is designed to experience the research processes of collecting data, analyzing them, and formulating strategies through a real-business case throughout the semester.
