Inasmuch as these letters are written to the firm's customers to those already directly and vitally interested in the product they are now coming to be regarded as of the very first importance. The future orders placed or withheld by these customers determine in a large measure the success or failure of the firm. Therefore the time is fast passing when letters of everyday correspondence addressed to customers or to interested prospective customers can be written in a routine way. Business men are insisting that it takes something more than the mere omission of certain hackneyed words and phrases to make highly effective every day letters of business.
