

interference from stations next to the one you've tuned.

Strong-signal capability is another factor of particular importance to city dwellers. It indicates susceptibility to overload from nearby FM broadcasting antennas. If your tuner is overloaded, you will pick up some stations at more than one location on the dial.

Capture ratio. A tuner with good capture ratio will receive the stronger of two broadcasts coming in at the same frequency and reject the weaker one. That could be important for listeners who live between two big cities. . .

A good performer here will also help reject noise on FM signals that reach you by two or more routes: directly and by bouncing off mountains or tall buildings.

Frequency response is a measure of a tuner's ability to render music frequencies smoothly and uniformly. Considering the inaccuracy of the headphones, it's of minor importance. (But models are quite good anyway.)

Battery life. Running a tuner takes much less power than playing a tape, because the tuner doesn't use the motor. But some tuners require less power than others.

Performance as a recorder

A few models let you make your own stereo recordings. But you may not be happy with the result if you tape music. Although these machines are high-fidelity players, they are not high-fidelity recorders.

A recorder usually has an automatic level control (ALC), a feature that keeps the recording level fairly even despite variations in the loudness of sounds picked up. That's handy when recording voices, but it reduces music's dynamic range.

Models that are recorders are best suited for voice recording: memos, conferences, lectures, and the like. The ALC feature adjusts for loud and soft (or distant and near) voices, so that the machine plays back at much the same volume. And the stereo effect helps you sort out who said what if several people spoke simultaneously as you recorded.

Types of tapes. Like most walkarounds, the recorders are promoted for ability to handle advanced Type IV (metal) tape. In fact, the recorders merely have a switch that allows them to handle Type II (high-bias) and Type IV tapes in playback. All the recording models are intended to record on Type I (normal-bias) tape. (Bias is an inaudible signal needed only when making records on tape.)

Convenience

A walkaround player should be easy to use. Here are some of the factors considered by CU's electronics engineers.

Portability. A number of models are about as small as you could reasonably want. And some weigh as little as 11 ounces, including batteries and a tape. Even a "heavy" one, at 17 ounces or so, should be fairly easy to carry as long as it's firmly clipped to a belt.

Most walkarounds give you the option of using a shoulder strap or a belt clip or loop. For security, you may prefer the clips, with their handy open ends that slip over a belt or a beltless waistband. Most clips attach directly to the carrying case or the walkaround itself and are removable.

Less convenient (and more likely to jiggle when you walk) are models that have only belt loops on their carrying cases. To attach or remove these units, you must undo your belt. Loose mounting, as with a shoulder strap or belt loop, makes for more flutter when you move about.

The shoulder straps on most models attach to the carrying case. Normally, using the case isn't cumbersome, but with some models you have to remove the player from the case to change tapes.

Controls. Various control features can affect your satisfaction with a tape player. Balance and tone controls let you make adjustments for poor tapes. Locking fast-forward and rewind controls mean that you needn't keep your finger on a button. A cue/review feature lets you go from playback to fast-forward (cue) or rewind (review) and back without having to press the stop control, which is handy if you're searching for a particular passage on tape. Separate left and right volume controls make volume adjustments cumbersome. Models that eject their tape at a second press of the stop button are handier than those that don't.

Power-assisted light-touch controls make it easy to switch between play and stop when your listening is interrupted. In models without light-touch controls, check for some other way to mute or pause the sound conveniently.

Automatic reverse. Once you've played the first side of a tape, several models automatically shift into reverse to play the rest of the tape. Or there may be a push button to do the job. An auto-reverse machine will normally continue to play one side of a tape, and then the other, until you turn it off or until the batteries fail.

Nonreversing models switch off at the end of a tape. Some also switch off after rewinding—a feature that saves on batteries and wear.

Battery light. Usually there's a light that's supposed to tell you about the condition of your batteries. Ideally, it should dim just before the batteries need replacement. The lights of some models do. But in others the lights go out too soon or are still bright when batteries are too weak to operate the machine properly. In such cases, the lights serve at best merely as indications that the unit is on.

Power options. All models have a jack for an AC adapter to let the machine run on household current. If you want one, you may have to go to a dealer. On many models, the jack won't accept the plug on a "universal" AC adapter. A few models sold come with a separate battery case that holds two D cells, which should have more than four times the playing life of AA batteries.

All the models with a tuner use the headphone cord as an antenna. Aiwa HS-J02 also has a collapsible antenna, an advantage in some situations.
