

CommonSpace

A Virtual Breakroom to Socialize and Network with Colleagues

About

CommonSpace is a virtual breakroom which allows employees of organisations to socialize with each other in a common, shared space.

This space mimics a physical room such as a cafeteria, by using isometric, 3D representations of objects, to make the experience of virtual socializing as immersive as possible. In this space, users can take a virtual seat at a table and have conversations with their colleagues.

What makes CommonSpace different from a regular video call, is that by using picture-in-picture video, individuals can also see employees who are seated at different tables. It allows users to have impromptu break sessions for informal conversations with their colleagues - and also allows them to "bump into" other users who are also on a break - this allows users who are on a break and who are willing to have casual conversations visible and easy to approach.

Context

"The Covid-19 pandemic introduced new circumstances forcing us to think fast to innovate and design which resulted in accelerated innovation as a response to address the new challenges & constraints of a touchless world. Most of the solutions were to mitigate the challenges of critical but temporary in nature and possibilities are still there waiting to be explored. Although, it was not a surprise anymore, the second wave did more damage, forcing us to re-think some permanent changes in view of an impending third wave."

This project was undertaken as part of my pre-thesis project in my final year of college. The unit, named "Re-wired: Re-orienting Human-Technology relationships in a Post Pandemic Era" required us to re-orient the disoriented relationships through design interventions at individual & community level in both urban & rural settings.
