1. INTRODUCTION

The environment has a pivotal role in the holistic growth and development of every individual. Indeed, the African proverb, "it takes a whole village to raise a child" remains relevant in this time and age. The success or failure of an individual mirrors the kind of community environment he/she is part of. A number of recent studies suggest that high levels of poverty within the community can adversely affect children's development regardless of the quality of the individual family environment. Brody, et al. (2001) studied the influence of neighborhood characteristics on 10- and 11-year-old African American children in Iowa and Georgia and found out that children who lived in disadvantaged communities, whether urban or rural, were more likely to affiliate with antisocial peers than were children living in more affluent communities. Affiliating with antisocial peers had a negative effect on children's academic progress, even when those children came from nurturing, supportive families.

In this study, community environment refers to learning and social communities of junior high school students in a countryside of the Philippines. School learning environments are a matter of global policy and systemic government investment (Dumont & Istance, 2010). The strategic reconsideration of school learning spaces is a response to demographic, economic and technological changes that have altered the perceptions of what constitutes effective teaching and learning (MCEETYA, 2008; New Zealand Ministry of Education, 2011; New Zealand Ministry of Education, 2014; OECD, 2013).
