

Communicating Public Health Guidance to Cases and Contacts

Recommendations for COVID-19 Case Investigators and Contact Tracers

Introduction

The COVID-19 pandemic has devastated communities both in the United States and abroad. The fear, uncertainty, and trauma caused by the pandemic also affect how individuals interpret public health messages. It is important for case investigators and contact tracers to understand how this stress affects a person's ability to understand public health messages, and to tailor their communications accordingly. This brief outlines actions that case investigators and contact tracers may take to communicate effectively.

Recommendations

- Keep the message concise: When a person is under stress, it may be difficult for them to take in large pieces of information. Keep your message simple. Avoid extensive background, jargon, or technical information.
 - Example: When describing the Omicron variant, you may choose to say, "It's another version of the virus that causes COVID-19." Avoid technical information such as, "Omicron has four mutations in positions 142-145 that fall within the NTD-Antigenic Supersite."
- Repeat the main message: Stress may produce anxiety, which could cause someone to forget your message. Repeating the main message can ensure that the person remembers what you are trying to convey. Ask yourself: what is it that the case or contact needs to know?
 - Example: If you're informing the contact that they should get tested if they develop symptoms, try repeating this statement in the beginning, middle, and end of your conversation.
- Provide 3-4 action steps: Under normal circumstances, individuals only remember 3-7 pieces of information at a time. However, when under stress, people are often able to remember as few as three simple directions (i.e., "stop, drop, and roll" are directions often used for a fire response). Try to summarize public health guidance in 3-4 simple action steps.
 - Example: When providing quarantine instructions to a contact, you may choose to say, "Stay home, wear a mask around others, and get tested."
- Give positive action steps: When under stress, it is easy to forget, overlook, or confuse words like "no" or "not." When possible, frame action steps in a positive way.

Communicating In Public:

Communicating Public Health Risk José Sixto-García, Sara Pérez-Seijo, Berta García-Orosa, 2024-10-01 This important volume provides not only an in depth analysis of those risk communication strategies currently used to inform and educate the public around key health issues but also the risks and effects of radon a natural but carcinogenic gas that so far has seen relatively little wider coverage As the leading cause of lung cancer worldwide after smoking radon is an important yet hidden public health issue but informing and educating the public about its hazards and dangers is far from straightforward As well as offering a detailed overview of issues around radon itself the book asserts that public health communication should be dialogic and interactive culturally tailored to specific populations to ensure people comprehend and appreciate risk to themselves and their environments The challenges are of course significant in a pluralistic media landscape where disinformation and misinformation threaten the integrity of any message sent Featuring chapters from researchers across a range of disciplines this enlightening book will interest students scholars and professionals working in Public Health Environment Health and Communication Studies
