Community-oriented Policing in Law Enforcement Jalyssa Rae-lynn Aguirre,2021 Community oriented policing is a method of policing developed in an attempt to build better relationships between neighborhood community members and law enforcement officers of public safety agencies Since the incorporation of law enforcement agencies into American society in the 18th century many citizens have supported those in positions of enforcing the law whereas others have disputed their existence based on unjust levels of authority excessive uses of force and acts of police brutality Those who question the actions of law enforcement officers and victims of police brutality themselves have protested law enforcement with the societal movement Black Lives Matter whereas law enforcement and their supporters have counter protested with the movement Blue Lives Matter This lack of connection and common ground between police officers and the people they serve with a lack of support predominantly stemming from black and brown communities has caused for a nationwide revolution in law enforcement tactics to take place To supplement this reform law enforcement agencies across the United States have embraced community oriented policing and support its primary goals of developing community partnerships and strategies to reduce crimes This proposed research study will analyze the factors which led to a shift away from traditional modes of policing and into more modern methods through community oriented policing The Los Angeles County Sheriff s Department will be taken into consideration as a focal point to analyze the implementation of community oriented policing A survey will be used to analyze whether or not Los Angeles County Sheriff s Department sworn personnel are knowledgeable on various facets of community oriented policing and question how and if patrol stations are successfully implementing this method of policing Additionally a survey will be offered to community members to analyze their satisfaction with Los Angeles County Sheriff s Department deputies and also ask open ended questions to allow for personal responses on how community oriented policing can better be achieved in their neighborhoods Community policing in ACTION!
