Health Care Manual for Community Health Workers Clifford Smith, 1996 The Lives of Community Health Workers Kenneth Maes, 2016-12-01 The importance of community health workers is increasingly recognized within many of today's most high profile global health programs including campaigns focused on specific diseases and broader efforts to strengthen health systems and achieve universal health care Based on ethnographic work with Ethiopian women and men who provided home based care in Addis Ababa during the early roll out of antiretroviral therapies this book explores what it actually means to become a community health worker in today's global health industry Drawing on the author's interviews with community health workers as well as observations of their daily interactions with patients and supervisors this volume considers what motivates them to improve the quality of life and death of the most marginalized people The Lives of Community Health Workers also illuminates how their contributions at a micro level are intricately linked to policymaking and practice at higher levels in the field of global health It shows us that many of the challenges that community health workers face in their daily lives are embedded in larger social economic and political contexts and it raises a resounding call for further research into their labour and health systems they inhabit Community Health Workers Haile Mariam Kahsay, Mary E. Taylor, Peter A. Berman, 1998 This book examines the present and future role of community health workers CHW as part of ongoing efforts to develop sustainable health systems and improve public health Noting that many programs based on the use of community health workers have fallen short of initial expectations the book draws on numerous evaluations conducted over the past three decades to identify problems explore their roots and propose concrete solutions Information ranges from advice on the composition and functions of village health committees through a discussion of the effect of cost recovery programs on community participation to the simple reminder that programs that were never correctly implemented should not be dismissed as ineffective Throughout lessons learned from past experiences are discussed in terms of their relevance to market oriented reforms that are currently changing the health sector The analysis is presented according to three main groups of factors known to have an impact on the performance of CHW programs. Attitudes are considered in the first chapter which aims to define the actions health authorities can take to improve the attitudes of health workers and communities towards each other. Proposals include changes in selection criteria, curricula, teaching methods on the job, training and supervision. Ways to increase community participation are also discussed. Chapter two focuses on the management and structure of district health systems as an area where organizational reform could have a significant impact on the success of CHW programs. Three components of the district health system are given particular attention: health service structure, health management structure and health development structure. Practical advice is given for improving the functions of village health committees, securing community participation and involving traditional healers. The final chapter on resources considers the important issues of remuneration, planning and budgeting for programs and mechanisms for securing financing from governments, communities and the private sector. Experiences from Thailand and Jamaica are used to explore methods for assessing program costs. The book concludes with a call for continuing international commitment to the CHW concept and a discussion of the main challenges likely to confront programs in the future.

Community Health Workers: Describing the Breadth of Interventions and Contexts Across the World Mathieu Nacher, Nicolas Vignier, 2025-05-15. Social inequalities in health remain a challenging problem throughout the world. Despite a variety of specific contexts, vulnerable populations often present to care later with more advanced health problems and often greater fatality rates at younger ages. To remediate this, health services NGOs project personnel to liaise with the communities and serve as an intermediary between health professionals and patients from vulnerable populations. The denominations may vary: health mediation, cultural mediation, community health workers, Agente de Sa de and sometimes entail different functions. Hard evidence on the impact of these mediators is often lacking because of the differences in contexts, specific health problems considered and what mediation entails in different countries. In this Research Topic, we encourage submissions of articles that describe a range of experiences for different contexts where mediation, health mediation, cultural mediation, community health workers, Agente de Sa de programmes are deployed for public health issues. From this variety of experiences, we hope this special issue will constitute a precious repository of experiences and contexts that could be transferable and scalable interventions for others.
