The Ties that Bind Us Richard Kiy, 2005 The Ties That Bind Us addresses the difficult living and working conditions of Mexican migrant workers in San Diego County California considering policy implications for both sides of the US Mexico border The authors highlight the circumstances of individuals who seeking to escape poverty come to San Diego hoping to exchange hard work for a chance to get ahead and who often meet rampant discrimination substandard and severely overcrowded housing a paucity of appropriate health information and services and untenable labor condition In exploring the migrants situation and some of the forces that drive them into the migration stream the authors also suggest steps for alleviating their compromised life circumstances They argue as well for legalization of the migrant population so that migrants can access the full range of services available in the transborder region

We Do Know How James T. Riordan, 2014-09-24 An insider with practical experience in development work reveals how understanding market realities can more effectively reduce poverty This book by a practitioner not an academic government official or pundit has been written for practitioners and offers fresh thinking on how to do international development work It combines that thinking with practical guidance in plain English on what to do and perhaps just as importantly what not to do on the ground We Do Know How takes buzzwords commonly used in development circles demand driven results oriented accountability and others and makes them real spelling out a proven approach for expanding business sales and generating jobs for poor people Although government has a role to play in development in the end the actions of businesses drive economic growth and expand people s incomes We Do Know How shows how to build on the incentives that drive businesses and in the process create jobs for the poor Specifically it urges development practitioners to support only those business opportunities for which there is market demand abiding by the maxim produce what you can sell not sell what you produce More than that it cautions practitioners not to become solutions looking for problems but to search creatively for ways to solve the specific problems that stand most in the way of clients meeting buyers requirements We Do Know How challenges much conventional wisdom on how to do development work At the same time and in contrast to other books on development it shows how by maintaining focus and discipline development practitioners can deliver demonstrable increases in jobs for those who need them

Communities and Markets in Economic Development Masahiko Aoki,The late Yujiro Hayami,2001-05-31 This book explores the role of community in facilitating the transition to market relationships in economic development and in controlling and sustaining local public goods such as irrigation forests grazing land and fishing grounds Previously it was customary to classify economic systems in terms of varying combinations of state and market control of resource allocation In contrast this book recognizes community as the third major element of economic systems This new approach also departs from the conventional view that markets and community norms should be treated as mutually exclusive means of organizing economic activity instead clarifying the situations in which they may become complementary Further discussion focuses on the conditions under which management of local commons can and should be delegated to local communities rather than subjected to the control of central government These and other issues are investigated by twenty one leading scholars from economic history development economics agricultural economics and institutional economics The resulting volume is the latest in a set of four books about East Asian developmental experiences co sponsored by the Economic Institute of the World Bank and the Stanford Institute of Economic Policy Research It will appeal to economists and other social scientists with an interest in economic development history comparative systems and institutional economics Dutch Village Communities on the Hudson River Irving Elting,1886 The Western Honey Bee ,1916 The Congregation of Saint Joseph of Carondelet Mary Lucida Savage,1923 Official Report of Debates, House of Commons Canada.
