

Planetary Bow Shocks

Solar Wind Particles (p, e, He⁺⁺)

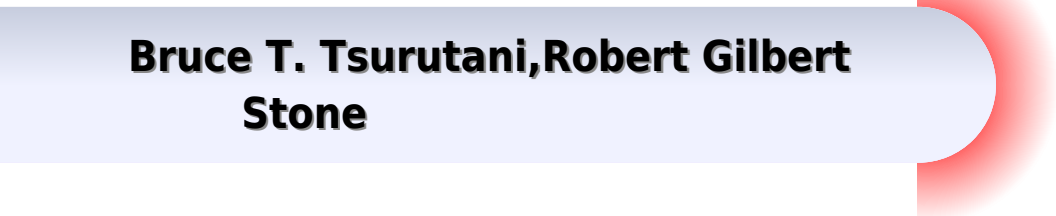

Solar wind ($v = 400 \text{ km/s}$) is highly supersonic in the region of the planets. Particles passing through the bow shock are both decelerated and heated.

By the time the solar wind has left the solar system, it hasn't lost much of its velocity. This high-speed medium contributes to interstellar shocks. More luminous stars (O, B, giants) have significantly denser and more energetic stellar winds.
