Cost-benefit Analysis for Developing Countries Robert J. Brent, 1998 Using case studies economic theory and empirical research the author of this work analyzes developments in project appraisal using the approach recommended by the World Bank Considerations include investment criteria risk analysis the social discount rate and the basic needs approach

Cost-benefit Analysis and Project Appraisal in Developing Countries Colin H. Kirkpatrick, John Weiss, 1996 The techniques and methods of project appraisal in developing countries have been considerably expanded and refined since they were first introduced in the late 1960s This up to date and authoritative survey volume demonstrates the ways in which cost benefit analysis has developed in response to changes in economic circumstances and conditions over the past three decades An international group of academic and professional economists covers areas including problems in the practical application of cost benefit techniques by international agencies the treatment of income distribution discounting the effects method the logical framework as a complement to project appraisal aid tying risk criteria in decision making benefit valuation in the water sector the appraisal of technical assistance projects privatization in transition economies and shadow pricing in transition economies Professor Kirkpatrick and Professor Weiss have prepared an insightful overview essay introducing the broad selection of work presented in this volume Cost Benefit Analysis and Project Appraisal in Developing Countries will be welcomed by academic and professional economists working on project appraisal in the context of the economic problems of developing and transitional economies

Pollution and the Firm Robert E. Kohn, 1998 Pollution and the Firm is an important book which presents new concepts of the marginal cost of substituting non pollutive for pollutive goods Technical in its approach it complements the other literature in the field and will be a significant contribution to the understanding of microeconomic issues in pollution control The book focuses on three main concepts substitutions in consumption emission abatement and exposure avoidance The first part considers the adjustment of the scope and combination of goods produced as a method for controlling pollution The author argues that pollution is controlled by increasing the relative price of the polluting good in the production process thereby reducing demand and subsequent production of the good In the second part the discussion is extended to include the possibilities of preventing or abating emissions in relation to three models first pollution prevention when non polluting inputs and processes are substituted for pollutants second when a proportion of the polluting output is recycled rather than being discarded and finally end of pipe abatement where additional technology is used In conclusion the author assesses the extent to which pollution damage is controlled by avoidance of emissions with avoidance being modelled as an add on technology with its own returns to scale This important book combines theories of the firm with a welfare economics approach to pollution control and will be welcomed by environmental and resource economists as well as microeconomists with an interest in environmental issues
