Communication Audits: Building World Class Communication Systems, 2004 Effective internal communication is a vital pre requisite for the functioning of all organisations Yet it is a commonplace that communication is poor in most Employees complain that they neither know nor understand corporate priorities while frustrated senior managers insist that they have invested a great deal of time in explaining them There is additional evidence that information transmission from the bottom to the top is also defective with employees and even managers fearing to articulate their true opinions to those further up the hierarchy Rosenfeld et al 1995 Thus senior managers often have a very limited understanding of the communication dynamics within their own organisation In our own research in this field we have frequently found that the people most surprised by audits which point to problems are the senior management team Hargie and Tourish 2000 The result can be a climate of mutual suspicion rather than trust with energies that should be focused on beating the competition squandered in internal struggles In this chapter we suggest that the key to building a world class communication system lies in managers having an accurate picture of how well they and everyone else are actually communicating In a nutshell we advance a twofold argument 1 All organisations need a focused communication strategy designed to build a world class system for sustaining internal communications 2 The first step in implementing the above is that current practice must be rigorously and honestly evaluated utilising communication audit techniques We then discuss in depth how audits can be implemented and the data collection options available While the main focus of this chapter is upon internal communications audits are also of importance for external communications and so we raise issues of relevance to the latter area as well

Communication Audit Handbook Seymour Hamilton,1987 Auditing Organizational Communication Systems Gerald M. Goldhaber,Donald P. Rogers,1979 Communication Audits and the Effects of Increased Information: a Follow-up Study ,2002 Communication audits have now featured in the literature for 50 years and many audit approaches have been evaluated However follow up studies designed to chart the actual impact that an audit makes upon communication performance have not been reported Rather audits are typically presented as one shot events whose impact is not measured It is as if the audit is an end in itself rather than part of a process of measurement and performance improvement This paper is therefore timely since it employs a follow up audit to track the effects of an initial audit upon a major health care organization The findings do not support the view that the frequently expressed desire of staff for greater communication is a metamyth and that an increased flow of information simply produces a demand for more Rather and consistent with the precepts of Uncertainty Reduction Theory the provision of information reduced uncertainty and generated increased satisfaction with communication processes The results from this study also illustrate how the audit can play a useful role in an organization communication strategy Strategic Communication in Event Planning for Corporations,
