Community Child Health An Action Plan For Today:

Community Child Health Jean C. Fahey, John G. Heilman, Judith S. Palfrey, Sean Palfrey, 1995-10-30 Community Child Health is designed to orient physicians nurses social workers public health officers and allied professionals to the world of children and to help them devise practice styles and priorities in concert with the current needs of children Palfrey s central thesis is that society has lost sight of children and as a result we have done a very poor job of structuring the environment to nurture them as they grow Ironically communities are breaking apart just at the time when families need them the most leaving children vulnerable confused and isolated The health consequences include poor school performance behavioral problems injuries early sexuality drug and alcohol use weapons possession homicide and suicide The medical professions can have a major impact in reversing these social and health problems Palfrey has designed this book to equip such professionals with the conceptual frame data base and practical tips and tools that will result in improved results in the growth and development of children It is an advocate s manual a cookbook for the program planner and a guide for the child health professional seeking improvements in community child care

Community Organization Jesse Frederick Steiner, 1925 Community Perspectives on Obesity Prevention in Children Institute of Medicine, Food and Nutrition Board, 2010-01-01 As the public health threat of childhood obesity has become clear the issue has become the focus of local state and national initiatives Many of these efforts are centered on the community environment in recognition of the role of environmental factors in individual behaviors related to food and physical activity In many communities for example fresh produce is not available or affordable streets and parks are not amenable to exercise and policies and economic choices make fast food cheaper and more convenient than healthier alternatives Community efforts to combat obesity vary in scope and scale overall however they remain fragmented and little is known about their effectiveness At the local level communities are struggling to determine which obesity prevention programs to initiate and how to evaluate their impact In this context the Institute of Medicine held two workshops to inform current work on obesity prevention in children through input from individuals who are actively engaged in community and policy based obesity prevention programs Community perspectives were elicited on the challenges involved in undertaking policy and programmatic interventions aimed at preventing childhood obesity and on approaches to program implementation and evaluation that have shown promise Highlights of the workshop presentations and discussions are presented in this volume Activities, 1926
