Implementing Transportation Planning With Older Adults After Driving Cessation: Observing Community Mobility, Social Participation, and Quality of Life Kathryn Moore, 2021 Purpose This study explored potential best practices in transportation planning and the influence of transportation planning on older adults who are facing driving retirement specifically in supporting social participation and quality of life and the impact on community mobility Design A descriptive case series investigated methods for implementing transportation plans and identifying related barriers along with facilitatory and inhibitory factors associated with community mobility for three older adults who received the recommendation to cease driving Data was collected during transportation planning sessions and through pre and post assessments regarding social participation quality of life and community mobility Methods Participants engaged in three intervention sessions to create and implement an individualized transportation plan based on their habits needs and supports Results Overall minimal change was noted on the pretest and posttest assessments measuring social participation quality of life and community mobility The data does not demonstrate a consistent increase or decrease in any outcome measure Strategies for implementing transportation planning include considering differences among participants and conducting sessions in person Barriers to implementing transportation plans include negative attitudes and emotions

limited transportation alternatives decreased insight to deficits and distractions from the transportation planning process Factors that facilitate community mobility were identified including access to a large support network and receiving rides from friends and family Inhibitory factors for community mobility include reluctance to ask others living in rural areas and impaired physical mobility Conclusion Meaningful trends and perspectives of older adults were identified as they transitioned to a stage in their life in which they are no longer driving Influential factors on transportation planning observed in this case series appear to be highly individualized Further research is indicated to more closely examine the relationship between transportation planning and social participation quality of life and community mobility

Origins and Destinations Study of Older Persons Kathleen L. Andereck, 2008 The purpose of this research was to help provide insight into the travel behavior and transportation needs of older persons in Pima County Several methods of data collection were done including face to face in home interviews of seniors with mobility limitations interviews with seniors who attended senior centers and a mail survey to a sample that was representative of seniors in Pima County The results of the study suggest that seniors are primarily responsible for meeting their own transportation needs However as these seniors age they are facing more challenges in managing their needs to travel freely around their communities The seniors we surveyed at the senior centers are more at risk than the seniors we surveyed through the mailed survey because of lower income lower health status and a larger number who live alone Seniors driving habits are changing Almost half report driving less in the past 2 years and 40% of respondents had no knowledge of public transportation services available in their communities While 71% would prefer a friend or family member to drive when they cannot seniors who live alone will have limited options The lack of transportation services can have a significant impact on quality of life for these seniors Many cited less participation in leisure activities because of driving less More than half feel that it would be difficult to remain in their current home if they are no longer able to drive In fact 24% have moved into a new residence since they stopped driving Seniors need more transportation options to stay active and involved The vast majority of the trips they make on a daily weekly basis are for social events to do errands or go to church Seniors feel that improving the quality of transportation services in the community will involve more dependable transportation and having a variety of options for transportation services Human Performance, Simulation, User Information Systems, and Older Person Safety and

Mobility National Research Council (U.S.). Transportation Research Board,2003 Senior Transportation Alternatives,2003 Alternative Transportation Options as Coping Factors in the Transition to Non-driving Kellia Jane

Hansmann,2023 Maintaining mobility around one s neighborhood and beyond is an important factor in healthy aging that can become challenging for adults who are reducing or stopping driving For the more than 30 million older adults who are current drivers their increased risk for chronic health conditions medication use and functional limitations over time can decrease driving safety With increasing age older adults are also at increased risk for both vehicle crashes and serious injury from crashes Efforts to support safe driving and access to alternative transportation options across the continuum of reducing and ultimately stopping driving are essential for maintaining mobility around one s neighborhood and beyond We still do not know if access to or use of these alternative transportation options is adequate to help older adults maintain their mobility and successfully transition to non driving In this dissertation I set out to assess whether presence of or actual use of alternative transportation options is associated with higher odds of driving reduction and cessation over time among community dwelling older adults in the United States I use data from the National Health and Aging Trends Study to characterize the association between social and environmental characteristics and the use of alternative transportation options to driving at three year follow up Aim 1 to characterize the effect of the actual and the potential ability to get rides from others on driving reduction over a three year follow up period Aim 2 and to characterize the effect of the actual and potential ability to walk or take public transit on driving reduction over a three year follow up period Aim 3 I found significant associations between key social and environmental characteristics and the odds of using alternative transportation options However only getting rides from others was significantly associated with a higher odds of reducing driving over a three year follow up period Other alternative transportation options including walking and taking public transit were not significantly associated with a change in driving behavior over a three year follow up period Our findings contribute to the growing literature on older adults coping factors in the transition to non driving We call for further research to investigate older adults attitudes toward and perceptions of their alternative transportation options to driving to inform the development and implementation of programs and policies to promote health and wellbeing regardless of the ability to drive independently

Accessible Transportation and Mobility 1999 National Research Council (U.S.). Transportation Research Board,1999

The Older Driver in Oregon ,2008 In a study of older adults and their travel patterns in Oregon a statewide mail survey and telephone interviews were conducted with older drivers and older adults who had voluntarily chosen to stop driving The purpose of the study was to determine 1 the factors that influence driving cessation 2 the physical and emotional barriers that delay driving cessation 3 what opportunities exist for alternative transportation after driving cessation 4 whether drivers make relocation decisions on the basis of driving cessation 5 the warning signs that make a driver stop driving and 6 whether a crisis situation generally forces a driver to stop driving Completed mail surveys included those from 342 respondents who were current drivers 184 urban and 141 rural plus 17 who did not report whether they lived in an urban or rural area and 158 respondents who had voluntarily ceased driving 110 urban and 37 rural plus 11 who did not report their urban rural status Telephone interviews were completed with 33 urban drivers 36 rural drivers 25 urban ceasers and 6 rural ceasers Changes in driving patterns occurred gradually and late mostly for respondents in their late 70 s or early 80 s Among the results of the study was the finding that those most likely to have chosen to stop driving were older depressed females in poorer health who were living in senior housing using alternative transportation when available making fewer trips and seeing fewer limitations associated with using alternative transportation Relocation to improve access to transportation alternatives was not seen by most respondents as a viable option Because this study was a cross sectional not longitudinal analysis it was not possible to determine causality e g to know whether people became depressed as a result of ceasing to drive or being depressed led them to cease driving or to know whether poor health was the result or cause of driving cessation Additional research is needed to establish causality ideally following groups of individuals in particular age cohorts over time including individuals forced to stop driving through the Medically At Risk Program Such research would enable better understanding of the factors affecting driving decisions and the effects of those decisions and help to signal possible strategies to implement to encourage the use of alternative transportation
