

COMMUNITY, CONFLICT, AND RECONCILIATION

James Campbell*

RESUMO – O artigo enfoca a abordagem social-pragmatista da concepção política de comunidade, especialmente à luz dos desafios decorrentes da tendência de conceber a democracia sem comunidade e de obscurecer os problemas e distinções entre conflito e reconciliação.

PALAVRAS-CHAVE – Comunidade. Conflito. Democracia. Pragmatismo. Reconciliação.

ABSTRACT – The article deals with the social pragmatist approach to the political conception of community, especially in light of the challenges posed by the tendency to view democracy without community and blur the problem and boundaries between conflict and reconciliation.

KEY WORDS – Community. Conflict. Democracy. Pragmatism. Reconciliation.

My topic in this paper will be community in the midst of divisiveness. After yet another of our quadrennial festivals of self-loathing that we call presidential campaigns, can anyone maintain that participation in the processes of our democracy makes us better? It was not always this way; often participation in political life was seen as a positive good. The Social Pragmatists, thinkers like John Dewey, James Hayden Tufts, and George Herbert Mead – as well as many others in America's past – praised the life of the active citizen. Tufts wrote in 1918, for example, that “a democratic government is a splendid government in many ways, but it will not run itself.” This need for citizen involvement was an advantage, he maintained, because active participation in the processes of self-government itself leads to citizen growth. As he phrased it, “we believe in democracy as rule by the people” because we believe that participation in the democratic process “makes people more intelligent, free, and responsible” (1918, 394, 405). In deliberative attempts to advance our communal interests through greater citizen involvement, we thus have the possibility of learning how to govern ourselves better. At least that is how things seemed to Tufts and others at various points in our history. Things seem different to me now. At present, our political practice is failing. Our society is deeply divided. Our fellows are suspicious of, and hostile toward, each other. Our community is broken.

We need to remember that Tufts's view was never the only one, and that our common life has often been spiky. We have had periods of far greater discord than at present – we had a Civil War once – and we have crawled back from many other instances of social fragmentation since then. A very short list of such conflicts would begin with two major “red” scares and three unpopular wars in Asia. In addition,
