Crafts and Social Networks in Viking Towns Stephen P. Ashby, Søren Sindbaek, 2020-02-19 Crafting Communities explores the interface between craft communication networks and urbanization in Viking age Northern Europe Viking period towns were the hubs of cross cultural communication of their age and innovations in specialized crafts provide archaeologists with some of the best evidence for studying this communication The integrated results presented in these papers have been made possible through the sustained collaboration of a group of experts with complementary insights into individual crafts Results emerge from recent scholarly advances in the study of artifacts and production first the application of new analytical techniques in artifact studies e g metallographic isotopic and biomolecular techniques and second the shifted in interpretative focus of medieval artifact studies from a concern with object function to considerations of processes of production and of the social agency of technology Furthermore the introduction of social network theory and actor network theory has redirected attention toward the process of communication and highlighted the significance of material culture in the learning and transmission of cultural knowledge including technology The volume brings together leading UK and Scandinavian archaeological specialists to explore crafted products and workshop assemblages from these towns in order to clarify how such long range communication worked in pre modern Northern Europe Contributors assess the implications for our understanding of early towns and the long term societal change catalysed by them including the initial steps towards commercial economies Results are analyzed in relation to social network theory social and economic history and models of communication setting an agenda for further research Crafting Communities provides a landmark statement on our knowledge of Viking Age craft and communication Plants & People in Ancient Scotland Camilla A. archaeological finds occurred in 1921 a year before Howard Carter stumbled upon Tutankhamun's tomb when Poul Norlund recovered dozens of garments from a graveyard in the Norse settlement of Herjolfsnaes Greenland Preserved intact for centuries by the permafrost these mediaeval garments display remarkable similarities to western European costumes of the time Previously such costumes were known only from contemporary illustrations and the Greenland finds provided the world with a close look at how ordinary Europeans dressed in the Middle Ages Fortunately for Norlund's team wood has always been extremely scarce in Greenland and instead of caskets many of the bodies were found swaddled in multiple layers of cast off clothing When he wrote about the excavation later Norlund also described how occasional thaws had permitted crowberry and dwarf willow to establish themselves in the top layers of soil Their roots grew through coffins clothing and corpses alike binding them together in a vast network of thin fibers as if he wrote the finds had been literally sewn in the earth Eighty years of technical advances and subsequent excavations have greatly added to our understanding of the Herjolfsnaes discoveries Woven into the Earth recounts the dramatic story of Norlund's excavation in the context of other Norse textile finds in Greenland It then describes what the finds tell us about the materials and methods used in making the clothes The weaving and sewing techniques detailed here are surprisingly sophisticated and one can only admire the talent of the women who employed them especially considering the harsh conditions they worked under While Woven into the Earth will be invaluable to students of medieval archaeology Norse society and textile history both lay readers and scholars are sure to find the book's dig narratives and glimpses of life among the last Vikings fascinating      Whitaker's Books in Print ,1990
