Abstract: Corruption is a threat to democracy, to the law's supremacy, to social equity and justice, it erodes the principles of efficient administration, undermines the market economy and endanger the stability of state institutions. Research on corruption has particularly focused on the classification of its various forms in order to operationalize the concept of analytical judgment and practical reasoning. In this context, conflict of interest represent one of the main form of manifestation of corruption in public administration

Keywords: Integrity, public administration, corruption, conflict of interest.

1. DEFINITION OF CORRUPTION – A NECESSARY DELIMITATION

During the past recent years, corruption makes its presence all over the world, and this fact has attracted the attention of the economists and of the public opinipon. The awareness of the dramatic effects of corruption on the process of development for a country has led to research incentives on the phenomenon and its various forms he wears in different countries around the world (Sierra D, 2006)

Choosing one single definition of corruption is very difficult. Taking into account a review of existing literature and bibliographic sources on this topic, academic research can be classified using at least the following criteria: in the context of different social sciences, according to the most important debate and discourse, and depending on the discussions that place in various governmental and nongovernmental organizations that have corruption, as their object of investigation. What is to be included and what is to be excluded in these definitions? What are the different types of corruption? What is the difference, if any, between corruption and the pursuit of wealth? (Popa Florin, 2012)

Research on corruption has particularly focused on the classification of its various forms in order to operationalize the concept of analytical judgment and practical reasoning. Therefore, there are many opinions regarding the best way to classify corruption into categories and subcategories. Some researchers have defined corruption as a particular state-society relationship and they make a distinction between 'political' corruption and the 'bureaucratic' one. Another classification is that considering 'functional' corruption and 'dysfunctional' bureaucracy. Other researchers have tried to link corruption with other phenomena or processes. For example, political sciences have
