Impact of parental Attitudes and educational Practices A. Siddiqui, 2020-11-10 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2019 in the subject Sociology Law and Delinquency grade 1 7 University of Tübingen Soziologie language English abstract The work deals with the question of what influence parental attitudes and educational practices have on the development of violent crime among adolescents At the beginning the approach of juvenile delinquency is explained This is followed by an empirical part in which the development of violence is explained Then the connection to parent child violence is described Healthy upbringing and the associated learning of social skills at the individual level in the form of interpersonal interaction is very important Such an education also has an indirect effect on the societal level with institutions such as kindergartens and schools now also having a secondary role alongside parents socialization instances play a formative role As a rule this ensures that children and adolescents are steered in the right direction and behave in accordance with society However not every young person is brought up well or healthily and this can have extensive consequences Perhaps the worst consequence could be that they do not accept prosocial attitudes and values Prosocial behaviour is desired by society and is in line with social and legal norms Conversely this leads to the assumption that antisocial behaviour could increase the likelihood of delinquent behaviour Delinquent behaviour can have fatal consequences which can have extremely negative effects within society This in turn leads to the question of which factors are responsible for criminal behaviour among young people

Causes of Conduct Disorder and Juvenile Delinquency Benjamin B. Lahey, Terrie E. Moffitt, Avshalom Caspi, 2003-05-22 A great deal has been learned about serious child and adolescent conduct problems but their causes are still not well understood This book brings together an international group of leading authorities to advance specific testable hypotheses about the causes of conduct disorder and juvenile delinquency Four general causal models are delineated the social learning model the developmental pathways model an integrative antisocial propensity model and an integrative ecological developmental model Also provided are models focusing on specific aspects of the origins of conduct problems including contextual psychological and biological influences The authors present significant original theoretical work and map out the kinds of further studies needed to confirm or disconfirm their new or revised hypotheses Developmental Theories of Crime and Delinquency Terence Thornberry, 2018-02-06 In Developmental Theories of Crime and Delinquency Terence P Thornberry and his contributors show that criminal behavior is not a static human attribute but ebbs and flows over the life course of the individual Criminal behavior tends to follow a distinct psychological pattern It is relatively uncommon during childhood is initiated by most offenders during adolescence flourishes during late adolescence and early adulthood and usually diminishes or disappears by the mid twenties This pattern is not characteristic of all people some never commit crimes and others become career criminals but it is a general description of the developmental pattern of criminal offenders This pattern has profound implications for theories of crime and delinquency Not only does it explain initiation into maintenance of and desistance from involvement in crime it offers insight into why crime flourishes during adolescence

Traditional theories of crime and delinquency have often failed to distinguish among different phases of criminal careers. They tend to ignore developmental changes that occur across a person's life course changes that coincide with and can explain the causes and patterns of criminal behavior. This paperback edition of the seventh volume of the distinguished series Advances in Criminological Theory moves us from static identifications of the criminal by presenting a broad range of developmental explanations of crime. Each contributor articulates a developmental or life course perspective in explaining how people become involved in delinquency and crime. Each covers a wide range of theoretical territory and reveals how a developmental perspective enhances the explanatory power of traditional theories of crime and delinquency. This volume is an invaluable tool for criminologists, sociologists, psychologists, and other professionals seeking to teach how crime and violence can be understood in our culture.

The Individual and Social Factors Contributing to Delinquency in Adolescence Helen Margaret Fleischer, 1944      Adolescence and Juvenile Delinquency Harold E. Davidson, 1960      Reforming Juvenile Justice National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Committee on Law and Justice, Committee on Assessing Juvenile Justice Reform, 2013-05-22

Adolescence is a distinct yet transient period of development between childhood and adulthood characterized by increased experimentation and risk taking, a tendency to discount long term consequences and heightened sensitivity to peers and other social influences. A key function of adolescence is developing an integrated sense of self including individualization, separation from parents, and personal identity. Experimentation and novelty seeking behavior such as alcohol and drug use, unsafe sex, and reckless driving are thought to serve a number of adaptive functions despite their risks. Research indicates that for most youth the period of risky experimentation does not extend beyond adolescence, ceasing as identity becomes settled with maturity. Much adolescent involvement in criminal activity is part of the normal developmental process of identity formation, and most adolescents will mature out of these tendencies. Evidence of significant changes in brain structure and function during adolescence strongly suggests that these cognitive tendencies characteristic of adolescents are associated with biological immaturity of the brain and with an imbalance among developing brain systems. This imbalance model implies dual systems: one involved in cognitive and behavioral control and one involved in socio-emotional processes. Accordingly, adolescents lack mature capacity for self-regulations because the brain system that influences pleasure seeking and emotional reactivity develops more rapidly than the brain system that supports self control. This knowledge of adolescent development has underscored important differences between adults and adolescents with direct bearing on the design and operation of the justice system, raising doubts about the core assumptions driving the criminalization of juvenile justice policy in the late decades of the 20th century. It was in this context that the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) asked the National Research Council to convene a committee to conduct a study of juvenile justice reform. The goal of Reforming Juvenile Justice: A Developmental Approach was to review recent advances in behavioral and neuroscience research and draw out the implications of this knowledge for juvenile justice reform to assess the new generation of reform activities occurring in the United States and to assess the performance of OJJDP in carrying out its statutory mission as well as its potential role in supporting scientifically based reform efforts     The Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency Walter C. Green, 2006 ABSTRACT Longitudinal studies that track individuals from childhood into adulthood may be the best method to identify risk and protective factors for crime and delinquency The primary goals of this study were to determine 1 the ability of risk factors identified by the end of elementary school to predict delinquency referrals 2 the extent to which positive assets promotive factors add to the prediction of delinquency and 3 potential interactions between these risk and promotive factors that moderate the relationship between risk and delinquency referrals The final purpose was to identify gender and racial differences in these relationships The current study utilized archival data from a large metropolitan Florida school district which tracked students who began kindergarten in the 1989 90 school year for as long as they remained in the district After controlling for gender race and SES fifth grade teacher rated externalizing behaviors prenatal smoking parent marital status and mother s years of education significantly predicted delinquency referrals The biological factors birth weight and Apgar score were not related to delinquency referrals in correlation or regression models Additionally the combination of the nine potential promotive factors was found to contribute to a significant increase in variance above that accounted for by the three control factors and nine risk factors The most consistently supported promotive factor was parental acceptance involvement Although no interaction effects were found in the overall model when analyzed by gender two significant interactions were found for females These interactions were between parents martial status and parental acceptance involvement as well as third grade standardized reading scores and parent educational involvement Findings suggest that even when using a stringent test of significance risk factors assessed between birth and the end of elementary school can be used to predict the number of subsequent delinquency referrals In conclusion results from this study not only identify and confirm early risk factors for later delinquency involvement but also implicate potential positive assets that may buffer the impact of early risk factors These findings can inform early intervention programs aimed at reducing rates of juvenile delinquency by identifying criteria for early identification as well as components of effective prevention intervention

Adolescence and Delinquency Bruce R. Brodie, 2007-05-03 This book applies modern object relations theory particularly the concept of intersubjectivity as articulated by Thomas Ogden to a population for which the treatment du jour is increasingly cognitive behavioral Taking his lead from the delinquent adolescents in his practice Dr Brodie presents a treatment approach based on respect rather than condescension Adolescents are related to as people rather than as transitory objects passing through a stage Rather than judging their feelings and behaviors as aberrant the author views them as having emerged out of the complex matrix of his patients lives Adolescence and Delinquency An Object Relations Theory Approach is less an attempt to apply object relations theory to a particular population than it is an attempt to illuminate the seamlessness of theory and application Theory and case examples are presented in a dialectical relationship psychological theory having no meaning other than an attempt to understand real people and the people we work with are unintelligible outside some systematic frame of reference

Delinquency in Adolescence Patti M. Hollenbeck-Dial, 1991

Adolescence and Delinquency Nicholas Emler, Stephen Reicher, 1995-12-11 In this book Nicholas Emler and Stephen Reicher present a new explanation for delinquency by asking about the social dynamics of behavior and misbehavior The central thesis argues that conduct is motivated by reputation the problem is to explain why so many young people choose to pursue delinquent reputations The book begins with a critical look at psychology s traditional reaction to deviance which has been to attribute it to flaws or deficits in the individual s psychological make up The authors go on to examine the major theoretical perspectives on delinquency in both psychology and sociology relating them to their common roots in the mass society thesis of the nineteenth century The fit between these theories and the facts is then explored in detail none account successfully for the major features of delinquency In the final section the authors develop their own account of delinquency which suggests that the pursuit or avoidance of delinquent behavior is a choice of social identity and moral reputation
