- Residential environment whose physical characteristics—building layout and site plan—function to allow inhabitants themselves to become key agents in ensuring their security." He goes on to explain that a housing development is only defensible if residents intend to adopt this role, which is defined by good design: "Defensible space therefore is a socio-physical phenomenon," says Newman.
- The theory argues that an area is safer when people feel a sense of ownership and responsibility for that piece of a community.
- If an intruder can sense a watchful community, he feels less secure committing his crime. The idea is that crime and delinquency can be controlled and mitigated through environmental design

Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design Garland F. White, 2006 This book argues that the level of social and physical capital in communities can influence the amount of crime Communities are conceived as varying across positive weak or negative levels of social and physical capital Negative social and physical capital produce higher levels of disorder and crime Conversely positive social and physical capital enables residents to lower social problems in communities Weak social and physical capital allows more disorder because the community's defenses against crime and disorder are not strong enough to combat these problems The general perspectives include broken windows defensible space hot spots collective efficacy social disorganization underclass gang communities the post industrialized communities and routine activities theory The ameliorative programs include the weed and seed program the moving to opportunity program community policing and empowerment zones
