Demand For Primary Health Services In The Third World:

The Demand for Primary Health Services in the Third World John S. Akin, 1985 Research report on the demand for primary health care in developing countries studies socio economic conditions and attitudes determining the users of health services reviews economic models of the demand for health services and health policy implications analyses practitioner use medical personnel in the Bicol Region of the Philippines suggests exploring new methods of financing health care programmes to keep down costs Graphs statistical tables Strategies for Pricing Publicly Provided Health Services Paul Gertler, Jeffrey S. Hammer, 1997 The Demand for Primary Health Services in the Third World, 1985 Financing Health Services in Developing Countries John S. Akin, Nancy Birdsall, David M. De Ferranti, 1987-01-01 This report discusses several different approaches that support reforming health care services in developing countries For some time now health care services have been supported by government funds As demands for improving health care services continue to increase additional demands will be placed on governments to respond This however will not be easy Slow economic growth and record budget deficits in the 1980 s have forced reductions in public spending Alternative approaches to finance health care services are needed Such possible changes could involve decentralization of federal government involvement the promotion of nongovernment involvement the imposition of user fees and establishing health insurance Finally the role of the Bank in pursuing new financing strategies is discussed Innovations in Health Care Financing George Schieber, 1997-01-01 Spanish edition World Bank Technical Paper No 345S This report examines specific policies for achieving sustainable development of the mining industry in the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean The report highlights the importance of the mining sector to national economies of the region and discusses World Bank assistance in formulating policy Also available in English ISBN 0 8213 3816 1 Stock no 13816 *A.I.D. Agency for International Development, 1982 Health Care Seeking Behaviour in Developing Countries Gill Tipping, Malcolm Segall, 1995 Covers studies published between 1984 and 1994 Development Assistance for the Third World M. Peter McPherson, 1981 Strengthening Health Services in Developing Countries Through the Private Sector Charles C. Griffin, 1989 This paper discusses the nature of private sector involvement in health service delivery in developing countries the potential for expanding it and areas where health sector policy goals might benefit from greater private participation It takes the wide and rarely occupied middle ground between the extreme pro public and pro private approaches to health care delivery A simple distinction between the private and public sectors is applied anything not done by the government itself is treated as part of the private sector The area of greatest potential for private sector involvement in developing countries is in hospital care It would require however the development of third party payment systems and a re evaluation in areas where governments are most heavily involved This would allow governments to retreat to the simpler and more appropriate tasks of financing and regulating health service delivery Governments probably cannot extract themselves completely from direct provision of curative care especially in rural areas Greater reliance on the private sector to supply remaining government facilities however can stimulate the development of more diversified private markets and supply lines in rural areas

Measuring the Willingness to Pay for Social Services in Developing Countries Paul Gertler, J. van der Gaag, 1988 This paper provides a methodology for the ex ante evaluation of the welfare effects of proposals to use user fees to finance improved access to social services in developing countries The analysis requires estimation of demand functions from which price elasticities and the willingness to pay for improved access can be obtained The willingness to pay is the maximum price that can be charged without reducing individuals welfare and utilization of medical services The estimation is complicated by the problem that governments in developing countries often are the dominant suppliers of social services in their countries and provide these services free of charge so that there is little price variation in the data It is shown how variation in individuals private time prices can be used to identify all of the parameters of the demand function The methodology is used to evaluate the possible implementation of the user fee plan for medical health clinics in rural Cote d'Ivoire The results show that it is likely to have regressive welfare effects Specifically the policy is shown to increase the welfare and medical care utilization of individuals in the top half of the income distribution while reducing the health and medical care utilization of individuals in the bottom

Financing Health Services Through User Fees and Insurance R. Paul Shaw, Martha Ainsworth, 1995 World Bank Discussion Paper No 294 Presents case studies that focus on user fees and self financing health insurance as a means of contributing to efficiency equity and sustainable financing in the health sector User fees are emphasized as a form of cost sharing because private out of pocket expenditures for health account for nearly one half of total expenditures in Africa Evidence presented in this report suggests that self financing insurance is more prevalent in many countries than had been previously thought

Medicine and Health in Africa: 1987, 1988 LSMS Working Papers, 1988 The LSMS Working Paper series was started to disseminate intermediate products from the LSMS Publications in the series include critical reviews covering different aspects of the LSMS data collection program and reports on improved methodologies for using LSMS survey data More recent publications recommend specific survey questionnaire and data processing designs and demonstrate the breadth of policy analysis that can be carried out using LSMS survey data homepage viewed Apr 1 2009
