

GREEK DEMOCRACY PRIMARY SOURCE ANALYSIS

You will be reading and answering questions on the following source. You should also pay attention to the principles of democracy found in both Ancient Athens and in our modern societies as you will be asked to compare and contrast them.

SOURCE: ATHENIAN CONSTITUTION

The following excerpt comes from "The Athenian Constitution," written by the Greek philosopher Aristotle between 330 and 323 BCE. Aristotle was the leading Greek philosopher of the time, and he created a writing account of the constitution of 170 different Greek states.

The present state of the constitution is as follows. The franchise (right to participate in government) is open to all men without of citizen birth by both parents. They are enrolled as citizens at the age of 18 years. During the course of the enrollment, the current citizens give the judges first an oath as to whether the man's candidature appears to fit all the age set by the law. If the candidature does not fit the right age, they are dismissed back into the ranks of the bachelors. Secondly, the current citizens give the judges an oath as to whether the candidate is free-born, and has been 18 years of age as the law requires. If they decide that he is not a free man, he can appeal to the law-courts. If the court decides that he has no right to be enrolled as a citizen, he is sent to Athens as a slave. If he wins his case, he has the right to be enrolled as a citizen without further question.

1) What kind of document is this (primary, secondary, government document, trial record, etc.)? What was its purpose?

2) According to the Athenian Constitution, who had the right to vote in Athens?

3) How did someone become "enrolled" as a citizen in Athens? Explain.

4) How was the definition of Athenian citizenship different than or similar to the way we determine citizenship today?
