Disintegrating Indonesia Implications For Regional Security:

Disintegrating Indonesia? Tim Huxley, 2013-09-13 Since the collapse of President Suharto's New Order regime in 1998 and the international intervention in East Timor in 1999 there has been much speculation in South east Asia and the West over whether Indonesia weakened by economic difficulties social distresses and political instability has a future as a coherent nation state This paper argues that although the separatist struggles in Aceh or Papua are unlikely to succeed in the foreseeable future other problems threaten to undermine the central government's control Communal disputes have led to chronic violence in Maluku Central Sulawesi and Kalimantan Simultaneously tension between Islamic and secular political forces has grown Indonesia's disarray has prompted international concern over an array of security threats including contagious secessionism Islamic terrorism the movement through Indonesia of asylum seekers piracy and environmental dangers In order to contain these security implications of Indonesia's protracted crisis concerned governments should continue assisting its fragile reform process particularly by helping Jakarta to manage the country's massive international debt However they should also coordinate their contingency planning for a further crumbling of Jakarta's authority

Non-traditional Security in the Asia-Pacific Ralf Emmers, 2004 This work studies the non traditional security agenda in the Asia Pacific focusing particularly on the dynamics of securitisation It questions why and how some issues are securitised and examines the policy outcomes that derive from securitising these concerns The conceptual discussion draws upon but also modifies the theory of securitisation and desecuritisation originally advanced by the Copenhagen School The empirical study analyses Thailand s securitisation of drug trafficking Singapore s combined securitisation of sea piracy and maritime terrorism and Australia s securitisation of people smuggling These various issues can be defined as forms of transnational crime The case studies consider the rhetoric used by the three countries concerned as well as their policy responses at the unilateral bilateral and multilateral level
