Transit Markets of the Future Sandra Rosenbloom, Transit Cooperative Research Program, 1998. Examines the effects of current trends, e.g., demographic, economic, social, land use, and transport policy, and trends expected over the next 15 years on current and future transit markets. Although many of these trends are not favorable to public transit, a number are identified that provide opportunities for maintaining current transit markets and creating new, expanded, or different transit markets. The report identifies 40 transit service concepts that appear to offer the most effective means of adjusting to these societal trends.

Being Together, Working Apart Barbara Schneider, Linda J. Waite, 2005-02-24. Despite the fact that most parents are employed, how work affects the lives and well-being of parents and their children remains relatively unexplored. A recent study of 500 dual-career families in 8 communities across the US provides a holistic view of the complexities of work and family life experienced by parents and their children. Drawing on the study, this book explores how dual-earner families cope with the stresses and demands of balancing work and family life, whether the time parents spend working is negatively affecting their children, how mothers feel managing both work and household responsibilities, and what role fathers are taking in family life. In answering these questions, the authors argue for a new balance between work and family life. The book, with its rich data, findings, and commentary from an interdisciplinary group of scholars, provides a valuable resource for academics, policy makers, and working parents.

Caring and Counting Reynolds, Tracey, Callender, Claire, Rosalind Edwards, 2003-07-25. The main work-life balance policies promoted by government focus on the amount of time mothers spend at work. This report challenges this approach. It suggests that what happens inside the workplace and how this interacts with family life is just as important.
