Easternisation Raphael Kaplinsky, Anne Posthuma, 1994 It might be thought that these new management techniques require the high levels of education and training found in the Japanese labour force But this book based upon studies of firms implementing these new management techniques in a range of developing countries in Asia Latin America and sub Saharan Africa as well as the UK and the USA shows that considerable gains can be achieved even in low income countries with poor levels of human resource development These management techniques improve the performance both of the implementing firms and the overall economy
