

Distribution of fresh water fauna occurs at slow rate than that of land animals.

- Phylogenetic systematics allows us to reconstruct histories of animal distributions.
 - Geographical distributions of closely related species are mapped onto a cladogram to generate hypotheses of the geographic history.
- Eurytopic species – not particular about biotopes (fit morphologically and physiologically).
- Stenotopic species – specified for biotopes.
- Wandering species.

Buzas, 1982 Systematics and Distribution of Foraminifera from the Coast of the Dominican Republic Joaquin Garcia del Castillo, 1984 The Ecology of Benthic Foraminifera with Emphasis on Their Distribution in Anoxic Sediments Joan Marlowe Bernhard, 1990 The Micropalaeontology of Oceans B. M. Funnell, W. R. Riedel, 1971-06-02 This 1971 volume presents the proceedings of a Symposium of Micropalaeontology of Marine Bottom Sediments held in Cambridge England in September 1967 The collection and paleontological interpretations of deep sea sediments had only been carried out intensively for the twenty years preceding the book's publication and it provides a summary of the state of knowledge in this field as it stood Beginning with a consideration of the organisms in relation to the water in which they live successive chapters deal with the descent of the skeletons to the sea floor their entombment in the sediments and their interpretation to elucidate the history of the oceans It is written by many of the specialists responsible for the development of this field and includes numerous Russian contributions This book became the definitive compendium for students and workers in oceanography and palaeontology and is still a useful resource today Marine Research, 1969 Guide to Smithsonian Serial Publications Alan Edward Schorr, 1987 Covers from 1964 to 1986 Marine Research, Fiscal Year 1968 National Council on Marine Resources and Engineering Development (U.S.), 1969 Foraminiferal Densities and Pore Water Chemistry in the Indian River, Florida Martin A. Buzas, 1993 Distribution, Ecology and Systematics of Recent Benthic Foraminifera from Jeddah Bay, Red Sea Ahmed Abdul Kader Bahafzallah, 1975 The Chesapeake Bay Bibliography: Maryland waters, 1971 Smithsonian Contributions to the Marine Sciences, 1993 Two New Oligocene Desmostylians and a Discussion of Tethytherian Systematics Daryl P. Domning, Clayton Edward Ray, Malcolm C. McKenna, 1986 A new genus comprising two new species of desmostylians is described from marine Oligocene deposits of the Pacific Northwest Behemotops proteus new genus new species is based on an immature mandibular ramus and apparently associated skeletal fragments from the middle or more likely upper Oligocene lower part of the Pysht Formation of Clallam County Washington A related new species Behemotops emlongi is founded on a mandibular ramus of an old individual and a mandibular fragment with canine tusk from the uppermost Oligocene early Arikareean equivalent Yaquina Formation of Lincoln County Oregon The two new species are the most primitive known desmostylians and compare favorably with the primitive Eocene proboscideans Anthracobune and Moeritherium and to the still more primitive tethythere Minchenella from the Paleocene of China For many years the Desmostylia were widely regarded as members of the mammalian order Sirenia before being accepted as a taxon coordinate with the Sirenia and Proboscidea Reinhart 1953 On the basis of cladistic analysis we go a step further and regard the Desmostylia as more closely related to Proboscidea than to Sirenia because the Desmostylia and Proboscidea are interpreted herein to share a more recent common ancestor than either order does with the Sirenia This analysis also suggests that the common ancestor of the Proboscidea and Desmostylia but not the Sirenia had suppressed P5 and the original last molar. These characters may be convergent with some other mammals. The Superorder Tokotheria McKenna 1975 was originally thought to be characterized by loss of both P5 and M3. However, because early sirenians do not show these losses, they may have occurred independently in the common ancestor of proboscideans and desmostylians and in various other tokotheres. The late Paleocene genus Minchenella Zhang 1980 from China is a suitable candidate to be the common ancestor of both the Desmostylia and the Proboscidea. It possesses a small entoconid II on M3. The Eocene genus Lammidhania Gingerich 1977 from Pakistan and the late Paleocene and/or early Eocene Chinese and Mongolian phenacolophids had not acquired an entoconid II on M3 but are otherwise similar to Minchenella and the anthracobunids. The Asiatic occurrence of phenacolophids, Lammidhania, Minchenella, and anthracobunids suggests an Asian origin for the Proboscidea and is in accord with the exclusively Pacific distribution of the Desmostylia. We believe that desmostylians were amphibious herbivores that fed on marine algae and angiosperms and that at least the earlier taxa depended to a large extent on plants exposed in the intertidal zone.

Ecology of Marine Protozoa Gerard M. Capriulo, 1990. Recent years have seen a surge of interest in the role of protozoa in the ecology of the world's oceans. In addition to their vital role in global nutrient cycles, marine protozoa also exhibit some of the most interesting symbiotic associations presently known, ranging from parasitism to mutualism, contributing greatly to our knowledge of eukaryote evolution. Additionally, stratigraphic examination of extinct forms provides important keys to past world climate and ocean conditions, while the study of extant forms yields major insights into present-day ocean conditions and circulation patterns. This volume provides a general overview of the ecology of marine protozoa. It features contributions from eleven internationally known oceanographers and marine biologists on such important topics as protozoan growth and nutrition, physiology, feeding activities, symbiosis, taxonomy, and paleobiology. The editor has helpfully organized the text on the basis of ecological function. It is intended for use by research scientists and graduate students in the fields of marine ecology, biological oceanography, and marine biology, as well as by microbiologists, cell biologists, mathematical ecologists, paleontologists, marine geologists, and marine chemists seeking an update on the field or who are considering work in this area.
