Divine Foreknowledge And Necessity:

Divine Foreknowledge and Necessity In-Kyu Song, 1996 The central aim of this dissertation is to defend the thesis that divine foreknowledge is compatible with a full blooded libertarian conception of human freedom I argue for such compatibility between the two by way of exploring what sort of necessity is involved in God's foreknowledge with regard to human freedom Assuming that God is sempiternal and essentially omniscient human beings do not seem to have the freedom to do otherwise since God has always foreknown what he knows in regard to human action in the future I conduct the inquiry whether divine foreknowledge is subject to accidental necessity the necessity of the past with the result that God's knowledge is judged to be free from such necessity I am not denying there is an element of pastness in divine foreknowledge in the sense that God held a certain belief at a past time And yet the content of such belief is alethically truthfully connected to the state of affairs which is to obtain in the future This is the gist of what I call the alethic relation In other words truth is analytically connected to God's prior belief It is not complete however for the foreknowledge compatibilist like me to affirm a compatibility with the alethic relation only In order for libertarian free will to be asserted to be compatible with divine foreknowledge counterfactual power over the past should also be available to the agent My contention is that such power which is distinct from any sort of retrocausal one can be invoked on the part of the compatibilist without inconsistency The grounds of such contention is related to the nature of knowledge including God's knowledge in that the knowledge does not cause anything whatsoever but rather human action is the logical basis of divine foreknowledge Therefore the necessity constrained by God's foreknowledge has nothing to do with human freedom to the effect that a compatibility between the two can be consistently maintained

Divine Foreknowledge and Necessity In-Kyu Song, 2002 The omniscience of God poses problems for the concept of free will that has occupied philosophers for centuries Song systematic theology Hapdong Theological Seminary South Korea presents an argument for the presence of free will based on the distinction between hard and soft facts proposed by 14th century theologian and philosopher William of Ockham He suggests that God's knowledge of any particular act is a soft fact that is dependent on the performance of that act itself God's knowledge of an act only becomes true if that act is performed This characteristic of God's knowledge as Ockhamist soft fact is what allows for human freedom of action Annotation copyrighted by Book News Inc Portland OR
