Dead Stone:

The Winter's Tale William Shakespeare,1898 Howard Barker: Plays Ten Howard Barker,2018-10-04 The tenth collection of plays by Howard Barker one of the most significant and controversial dramatists of our time His plays challenge unsettle and expose Plays Ten comprises the plays Ahno Distance Critique of Pure Feeling Irrespective Immense Kiss Exquisite In Ahno A Prince of Now a youthful dictator is revealed as simultaneously revolutionary and reactionary in politics and in love His shocking efforts to create a new social order are mirrored in his unconventional passion for a seventy five year old woman who along with his devoted commissar a group of fanatical priests and a disturbingly perceptive Dalmatian make up a menacing court of activists In Exquisite Barker s theme is the ethical ambiguity of slavery In a dimly feudal setting but constantly referring to our time unsolved murders decimate a stable community The protagonist a loyal and uncritical serf declines to speculate on the cause whilst at the same time possessing the power to put an end to it His ambiguous relationship with authority and his refusal to quarrel with his own status reveals Barker s heretical manner with moral platitudes Alongside full scale and even epic dramas Barker has always written short works for small casts In Distance he views the horrors of The Great War from an unusual perspective that of the mother of a killed son who arrives at her own philosophy of mourning In Irrespective a reclusive intellectual in his final years finds himself pestered for moral teaching by a wretched populace which has hitherto ignored him In Critique of Pure Feeling an old woman sceptical of love but not of property finds herself recklessly participating in an erotic duel Immense Kiss one of Barker s most terrible visions takes place as an army enters a besieged city where a young conscript discovering a woman abandoned in a room finds himself stretched between longing and civility Annual Report Pennsylvania.
