

Anglican

VS

Catholic

Papal Authority

In Anglicanism, there is no central authority figure like the Pope, and decisions are made collectively by bishops in each province.

In Catholicism, the Pope is considered the supreme authority and the successor of Saint Peter.

Church Hierarchy

Anglicanism, on the other hand, has a more decentralized structure, with more autonomy given to individual provinces and dioceses.

Catholicism has a highly centralized hierarchical structure, with a clear chain of authority from the Pope down to the local priests.

Sacraments

Anglicans have a range of beliefs about the Eucharist, with some holding a similar view to transubstantiation and others adopting a symbolic or spiritual understanding.

In Catholicism, the doctrine of transubstantiation is upheld, which teaches that the bread and wine in the Eucharist become the literal body and blood of Christ.

Liturgy And Worship

With different liturgical traditions within Anglicanism, ranging from elaborate high-church liturgies to more informal services.

Catholic liturgy is highly standardized and follows a prescribed format, with the celebration of the Mass being central to worship.

Clerical Celibacy

In Anglicanism, priests are allowed to marry, and there are both married and celibate clergy within the tradition.

Catholic priests are generally required to be celibate, meaning they abstain from marriage and sexual relations.

Female Clergy

Some provinces within Anglicanism have embraced the ordination of women, including female bishops.

The Catholic Church does not ordain women to the priesthood.
