Crime And Victimization Data:

Crime and Victimization Data Robert M. O'Brien, 1985-04 O'Brien treats the subject of criminal statistics in more detail than any single textbook chapter. He reviews the historical development of crime statistics, looks at how statistics are gathered, and then compares crime rate data from various sources. The implications of these comparisons, together with suggestions for improvements, are also made.

How Crime in the United States is Measured Nathan James, Logan Rishard, 2008. Crime data collected through the Uniform Crime Reports (UCR), the National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS), and the National Crime Victimization Survey (NCVS) are used by Congress to inform policy decisions and allocate federal criminal justice funding to states. As such, it is important to understand how each program collects and reports crime data and the limitations associated with the data. This book reviews 1) the history of the UCR, the NIBRS, and the NCVS; 2) the methods each program uses to collect crime data; and 3) the limitations of the data collected by each program. The book then compares the similarities and differences of UCR and NCVS data. It concludes by reviewing issues related to the NIBRS and the NCVS. The UCR represents the first effort to create a national standardised measure of the incidence of crime. It was conceived as a way to measure the effectiveness of local law enforcement and to provide law enforcement with data that could be used to help fight crime. UCR data are now used extensively by researchers, government officials, and the media for research, policy, and planning purposes. The UCR also provides some of the most commonly cited crime statistics in the United States. The UCR reports offence and arrest data for 8 different Part I offences and arrest data for 21 different Part II offences. The NIBRS was developed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to respond to the law enforcement community's belief that the UCR needed to be updated to provide more in-depth data to meet the needs of law enforcement into the 21st century. The NIBRS collects data including data on offence, offender, victim, arrestee, and any property involved in an offence for 46 different Group A offences and 11 different Group B offences. Despite the more detailed crime data that the NIBRS can provide, nationwide implementation of the program has been slow for a variety of reasons, including cost considerations. The NCVS is the primary source of information on the characteristics of criminal victimisation and on the number and types of crime not reported to law enforcement. The NCVS has four major objectives: 1) to develop detailed information about the victims and consequences of crime; 2) to estimate the number and types of crimes not reported to police; 3) to provide uniform measures of selected types of crimes; and 4) to permit comparisons over time and population type (e.g., urban, suburban, and rural). The NCVS asks respondents whether they have been the victim of rape and sexual assault, robbery, simple and aggravated assault, purse snatching, pickpocketing, burglary, theft, or motor vehicle theft. In addition to collecting data on the number of victimisations, the NCVS gathers data on the details of each incident of victimisation.

Surveying Victims

National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Committee on Law and Justice, Committee on National Statistics, Panel to Review the Programs of the Bureau of Justice Statistics, 2008-05-19. It is easy to underestimate how little was known about crimes and victims before the findings of the National Crime Victimization Survey NCVS became common wisdom In the late 1960s knowledge of crimes and their victims came largely from reports filed by local police agencies as part of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's FBI Uniform Crime Reporting UCR system as well as from studies of the files held by individual police departments Criminologists understood that there existed a dark figure of crime consisting of events not reported to the police However over the course of the last decade the effectiveness of the NCVS has been undermined by the demands of conducting an increasingly expensive survey in an effectively flat line budgetary environment Surveying Victims Options for Conducting the National Crime Victimization Survey reviews the programs of the Bureau of Justice Statistics BJS Specifically it explores alternative options for conducting the NCVS which is the largest BJS program This book describes various design possibilities and their implications relative to three basic goals flexibility in terms of both content and analysis utility for gathering information on crimes that are not well reported to police and small domain estimation including providing information on states or localities This book finds that as currently configured and funded the NCVS is not achieving and cannot achieve BJS's mandated goal to collect and analyze data that will serve as a continuous indication of the incidence and attributes of crime Accordingly Surveying Victims recommends that BJS be afforded the budgetary resources necessary to generate accurate measure of victimization Crime and Victimization Data Robert M. responses to victims Estimation of Victimization Prevalence Using Data from the National Crime Survey D. G. Saphire, 2012-12-06 The National Crime Survey is a sample survey of housing units conducted by the U S Bureau of the Census All eligible occupants of a sampled unit are interviewed every six months for up to seven interviews about victimizations that they have experienced during the previous six months In this monograph several longitudinal analyses are performed using a subsample of the data covering the years 1973 through 1975 In particular several methods of estimating the proportion of units that are crime free for a given year denoted by θ are discussed First several ad hoc as opposed to model based estimators of θ are discussed including those used by the Bureau of Justice Statistics We find models under which these estimators are consistent for θ One such model fits the data very well A superpopulation approach to the estimation of θ is then taken assuming that the nonresponse and sampling mechanisms are ignorable Three models are fit to the data i a homogeneous Bernoulli model under which victimization is independent from month to month ii a correlated Bernoulli model under which victimization in any two months has positive correlation ρ and iii a two state Markov model with states victimized and crime free The correlated Bernoulli model is found to be very inadequate The other two models fit the 1975 data well but have rather poor fits to the 1973 and 1974 data Rotation group biases are conjectured to be the cause of these poor fits Introduction to Forensic Psychology Curt R.
